A Nebraska Merchant Buries His Wife in Illinois, Only to Have Her Body Stolen.

Former Lover the Ghonl Who Does the Terrible Work-His Arrest and Incarnation, and the Recovery of the Body,

Now comes a most blood curdling story from Illinois, and which deeply interests several citizens of some prominence in this state. For a week or more past the Chicago papers have been filled with the reports of various grave robberies in neighboring towns, and it was evident that a regularly organized gang was engaged in desecrating the graves of de-

Yesterday noon, while at the depot, a sent out from this city yesterday afternoon to BEE reporter met Mr. E. R. McConaughy, a prominent lumber merchant of Stromsburg, this state, who related to us the blood curdling story of his brother's wrongs and sorrows.

The brother referred to is Mr. George M. McConaughy, a lumber merchant at Osceola, this state.

A few years since the McConaughy boys, Kate Craft, Newton J. Shinkle and the writer of this sketch were all school-fellows and class-mates together at Rochelle, Ill. At that time Shinkle was quite a favorite with Miss Craft and was considered deeply in love with her. A short time afterwards Shinkle entered the Cornell college and became a member of the Cornell college boat crew. He visited England and there gained a very unanviable record by his throwing the race in which his crew was entered, and upon his return to this country he was shunned by all his former friends, Miss Craft with the rest.

Miss Craft was the daughter of J. B Craft, a boot and shoe dealer of Rochelle, Ill., and prior to her marriage was the acknowledged belle of that place.

About one year ago George Mc-Conaughy and Miss Craft were married and moved to Osceola, this state.

A BROKEN AND EMPTY COFFIN. A few weeks ago Mr. McConaughy and his wife left their home in Nebraska to visit the old folks in Rochelle. While there the young wife became a mother, but her life went out with that of the old year, and New Year's day she was buried in the cemetery at Rochelle. The broken-hearted husband has made daily visits to the grave since the funeral, but it was not until Monday morning that the appearance of the newly-made mound excited his suspicion. There were indications that the grave had been disturbed, and recollections of the Hoyt case and Shinkle's alleged complicity in that affair flashed across his mind. imparted these suspicions to his father-in-law, and the two began an investigathere, but it was broken and empty. THE TRAIL AND THE DISCOVERY.

Monday afternoon Mr. Craft and his son-in-law visited Chicago and placed the case in the hands of the Turtle agency. The latter worked rapidly and effectively. It was learned that a man answering the description of young Waterman, one of the students under arrest, went to Rochelle New Year's morning and returned to Chicago on the midnight train over the to Chicago on the midnight train over the Northwestern with a large Saratoga trunk. It was further learned that Shinkle went to Chicago from Rochelle the day following. Operatives traced the trunk from the Northwestern depot to the Homeopathic college, and satisfied themselves that the trunk contained the missing body. Wednesday Dr. Ransom Dexter, who attended Mrs. McConaughty during her illness, accompanied by Captain Turtie, called at the college and asked to examine any "subjects" that might be on ject the college had received in about five weeks, it hoped that the county com-missioners would reconsider their stand on the question of pauper dead. RETURNED TO THEIR RESTING PLACE. The remains of Mrs. McConaughy were shipped back to Rochelle, Wednesday night, having first been properly shroud-ed and provided with a handsome casket. The husband and Mr. Craft sho returned to Rochelle.

Apparantly the desecration of the grave occurred early in the evening of New Year's day. It is a curious fact that Shinkle went to Chreago the day following in the same car with the husband of the dead woman. Mr. McConaughy having business which called him to that city.

Four men were arrested by the officers

Four men were wrested by the officers Four men were awested by the officers, Shinkie, Waterman, Coffee and Wright, alias Hall, for being implicated in the stealing of Mrs. McConaughy's body, and several other like jobs in that locality. They are now in jall in Sycamore, Ill., and Waterman made a partial confession, and acknowledged that the gang had stolen the body of a lady named Hoyt.

An attempt was made to work a further confession from the boys, and Shinkle was tackled with the following success:

"Me! Do you think I will say a word?"
exclaimed Shinkle, haughtily, as he struck his open hand with a novel he had been reading. "You think you can convict me, ch? Me, with Rush college and the doctors of the universe at my back?
No, sir, I will not say one word. Now de what you can with me. My attorneys have told me how to treat you fellows."
The prisoner was reconveyed to his cell, and, tilting his chair against the door-bars, he sat down with his back to the corridor, and began unaffectedly to read a flash book which grouped, under the title of "Poor Brandy," a dozen or more yarns about the dark side of life in Paris.

I have told you some things," he said, in trembling tones of measured accent. "I would give a year of my life to have those words back within my bosom. Say more! It I knew it was under penalty of the most painful death I would not say one word more."

Mr. Coffee was then called out and said: "When the county board refused "When the county board refused to allow the colleges their material from the pauper dead, the demonstrators be-gan to look around for a supply from other sources. I was acquainted with some of the college officers and knew that I could get a good price for the material I could furnish. Wright, who is here under the name of Hall, went in with me. "Were you a party to these cases?"
"I knew that they were going on. I went down to Joliet one night. We had many things in our favor, but the trip did not 'pan out' as well as we expected. After the lady had turned her man The night was dark and the ground worked well. We 'crushed' eight coffins and 'cracked' the vault, but we got only

"What became of the others?" "We could not work them. They had been dead too long. After we had crushed the boxes and set our grappling hooks on the bodies bad luck began. In some cases the skin of the 'stiff' would slip and the hooks come off. "Then you failed to get any of the bodies up? "No, we got two-one from a and one from the vault. We pulled off several arms and legs, and the flesh from one face. When they came up that way it was, of course, no use to try any further, for the bodies were rotten

THE CITIZENS WILD.

The people in Rochelle are fairly wild and persons who have friends buried in the cemeteries are examining graves closely to see that their bodies are still at rest in the bosom of mother earth. Prominent citizens, men who had been known through their lifetime for quiet lispositions, held aloft their hands, the fever of passion swelled their veins, and their heated breath struck fury dumb as they shouted. "Hang them!" "To h-ll with such wretches," "Theydon't deserve a trial," "A rotten court would be pol-luted by their presence," and other like

THE BEASTLY WRETCH. Captain Turtle was weary but exultant s he sat in his office Wednerday evening. 'We have given those grave-robbing fel lows a grand stirring up," he said, "and the end is not yet Shinkle is the main man. Just to see what sort of a creature he is, observe that he robbed graves strictly for money. He was a student at Rush Medical college, but he sold the two bodies where they would not reach the dissecting table of himself and his classmates. One went to the Homeopathic and the other to the College of Physicians and Surgeons.'

Miss Hope Glenn.

We clip the following from eastern journals, commenting upon Miss Hope Glenn who is to appear here on next Tuesday evening in concert with the Omaha Glee Club:

"Miss Hope Glenn's lovely voice and charming style aroused genuine enthus-iasm."—New York Herald.

"The popular favor which Miss Hope Glenn gained so instantly when she sang here earlier in the season was more than indersed by her reception last evening. Her singing of ballad music has an in-describable charm, by reason of the intelligence and thorough artistic skill shown in every measure, and the clean, clear enunciation adds another great at traction to her rendering of this class of composition. The Gluck Aria, however, showed that this artiste's abilities are not limited to the line of ballad singing, as the number was given an interpretation of great beauty."—Boston Herald.

"Her singing was one of the leading features of the evening, and the richness and purity of her voice, and the J. N. Pierce power of emotion which she showed, receipt for $20. made her work thoroughly enjoyable." Boston Journal.

The variety of picturesque costumes and the happy blending of many colors lent a peculiar fascination to the ever shifting kaleidoscopic nature of the scene, which was as much enjoyed by the active participants.

Amongst the most notable costumes was Mr. Helphrey, who, impersonating a dude of the last decade, attracted many favorable comments for originality. Mr. Brown, in grotesque make-up, was con-ompelled attention by a certain loveliness not unusual in members of that order.

Many other handsome and original Benzon & Bro. costumes abounded, including cow-boys, Mexicans, fairies, Columbins, red riding on two fifty for hoods, &c., but military and sporting suits of all kinds predominated with the three revolvers and some cheap jewelry was found. He is now behind the bars. In the bureau drawer was last month's wages of Mr. Martin, drawn only Wednesday, and a considerable amount of jewelry, which was saved by the prompt action of Mrs. Martin. She is entitled to the thanks of this entire community for her pluck in bringing this would-be robber to the place where he justly belongs, the jail. If we only had more women, yes if we had more men, in this city, filled with the pluck that fills the frame of Mrs. Martin, a stop might be put to some of this deviltry. The only regret is that the cold did no contract her finger on the trigger so as to cause the discharge of the revolver.
