THE SNELL TRAJEDY.

Was it an Accident or a Murder.

pecial Correspondence Lincoln Journal. Not since the yet unexplained shoot-ing of Col. Watson B. Smith has there occurred in Omaha, if, indeed, in Nebras ka, an affair possessed of so much melan choly mystery as the death of the woman called Jessie Snell, on the night of Satur-day, the 13th inst. There are not want-ing witnesses of the shot which killed her; there are many and anxious asser-tions that it was accidental; but to the own sake, there is room for doubt and speculation.

It is alledged that while the pistol was pointed towards the man Snell, who held it, the young woman now dead seized it by the muzzle and caused its discharge into her own breast; that the great affection for a long time held toward"Jessie, by Snell, preclucdes the idea of shooting

There have been men with more common sense and tear of God than cow-boys, who have, in a moment of rage, elled to the earth a dearer object than this woman, of whose character the less said the better. The testimony is unanimous to her fond caresses of this man Snell during the evening: that more than once her arms twined around him and her lips spoke tender words. There was no trace of disappointment; and yet I thought that there might be a melancholy meaning in that, after receiving that wound, she did not cling to him in the agony of an irreparable blunder, or utter one syllable of fond good-bye; her strength might not have been equal to this, but it was equal to her walking to the next room and lying down to die alone.

Perhaps there had come to her a sense of indiscribable horror of such a death. There is evidence that she came of good family; her feet are spoken of as very small, her hair as brown and curling; her face as not unattractive.
