AMUSEMENTS.

Silver King" at Boyd's Opera House Last Night.

One of the finest audiences of the seaon assembled at Boyd's opera house ast night to witness the first presentabut unqualified commendation. The keynote of the narative is found in the inspiring Tennysonian argument, "That men may rise on stepping stones of their is strong in dramatic interest, vigorous and healthy in tone, and fresh and forcible in dialogue, but there is no rant, ing. forced passion and irresponsisensationalism. The scenery are skilfully planned, and the whole machinery of the piece is smooth, effecttive and artistic. The plot of the story is well kept in hand, and has no lagging features. Wilfred Denver, a young man, with a wife and two infant children, has fatuously permitted himself to become wholly the slave of drink, and is fast dragging his wife and family down to drunken spree he is taunted and hounded to frenzy by Geoffrey Ware, a former suitor for the hand of his wife. In his mad delirium he swears to kill Ware, and ollows him to his room. On the same evening a band of burglars have plotted with the connivance of a clerk in the employ of Ware to effect a gigantic robbery, the means at fashionable clubs and in select circles as Captain Herbert Skinner. Denver on recovering from the effects of the drug finds Ware dead, and is forced to the terrible conviction that he is his murderer. Then follows an agony of remorse, a heart-breaking scene with his wife, a flight by train, a leap from the railway carriage, a disguise, and temporary shelter at a wayside inn, where the railway carriage, a disguise, and temporary shelter at a wayside inn, where the fugitive learns that there has been a ter rible railway accident and that he is counted amongst its victims. He finally makes his way to America, and among the silver mines of Nevada amasses enormous wealth, earns the sobriquet of the "Silver King," and, led by a ceaseless heart-hunger for his wife and child, he returns to England. He finds them in abject povercy, and anonymously relieves them, gathers by a scrap of conversation he overhears that he may be innocent of the murder of Geoffrey Ware after all.

He painfully and unwaveringly follows up a clue, and at length is able to clear his name and conscience, and claim reconciliation with his patient, longsuffering and faithful wife. There are, of course, many side issues introduced, all cleverly bearing upon the plot and contributory to its skilful working out. Mr. Charles A. Haswin as Wilfred Denver maintained his difficult part with consummate skill His agonizing appeals to the dead body of Groffrey Ware, his parting with his wife, his meeting on his return to England with his half-starved child and the recital to his old servant Jaikes of his fearful dream, in which he is confronted with the murdered Geoffrey Ware and renews his crime and goes through the old horror over again. All these passages were given with genuine cions of an outlaw upon whose head a part she was true and strong. William Morris as the Spider, kid-gloved, smooth tongued, and villainous to the core, was almost hissed by a portion of the audience in token of their appreciation of his detestable character. Mr. Perkins Fisher as Eliah Coombe, marine store dealer and confederate of the Spider, was deliciously bland, affectionate and villainous. Mr. H. Rich as Daniel Jaikes, an old servant of the Denver family, presented an extremely lovable and entertaining character. Blanche Newcomb and Baby Barr as the Denver Children were delightfully fresh and bright. The support throughout, in fact, was good and does not call for further particularization.

KID WADE CAPTURED.

Beguiled From His Fortress on the Broken Kettle to Le Mars.

And There Surrounded by Regulaters From the Niobrara and Taken in,

Shortly after dark last night a party of rough looking men drove into town from the cast and drew up in front of the Commercial hotel where they were received by the landlord and escorted into armed carrying shot guns and ritles and having revolvers hung upon them at every convenient point upon their anatomy. The fifth man of the party was adorned with a pair of handcuffs and seemed to be the special object of soliciude among the other four. It soon ranspired that the party with the handcuffs on was the notorious Kid Wade, the tion in this city of this new English drama, a production of which has thoroughly disarmed hostile criticism wherever it has been presented, and has won nothing
h senger, Michael Coleman and Peter Han- tion in the best sense of the term, should supposed to be part of the organiza- the field tion which is devoting the winter to dead selves to higher things." The plot purging the valley of its thieving marauders. The information that Kid Wade was in custody was soon spread and he had many callers during the even-

The story of his capture. is a long one. Last Sunday the squad above named started from the Niobrara valley for the is splendidly realistic, the tableaux Broken Kettle region of Iowa. They had positive information that the long sought or Kid Wade was hiding up in that unfrequented locality. Their horses' heads were turned direct for LeMars, which point was reached after a couple of days' ride. LeMars was their headquarters and from there they proposed to operate. They knew their man was at Mansfield's house, sixteen miles west from LeMars, in the Broken Kettle country, near the dragging his wife and family down to Dakota boundary. How to get him was beggary. While under the influence of a the question. The house was well fortified, being surrounded by a high board fence and the front door protected by heavy bars and an embankment, the only place of ingress being through a small rear door in the angle of an "L." Strategy was deemed more potent than force and Charles Messenger, of the pursuing party, undertook the work. He started from LeMars last Wednesday morning While the burglary is in progress Denver makes his way to the room and is promptly chloroformed. A few minutes afterwards Ware arrives homeand is shot by the kid-gloved, elegantly attired, super-genteel leader of the gang, who is known to his confederated as Spider, but the chief operator, Mr. Messenger. His wanderings finally brought him to the Mansfield house in the guise of a at fashionable clubs and in select circles the Mansfield house in the guise of a proposed that he go to Le Mars with him and get the balance. After that was accomplished they were to return to a neighboring house where a dance had been arranged for the evening and join in the festivities of the occasion, Kid in the festivities of the occasion, Wade fell into the trap and agreed to the proposition. He even permitted Mr. Messenger to ride his horse, a fine blooded animal, while he drove the other horses. In the course of time LeMars was reached. Messenger's allies were on the lookout and on a signal from him they ouietly gathered around and followed the Ulcers and Sores, and restores the Hair. was reached. Messenger's allies were on quietly gathered around and followed the pair into a stable which was to be their stopping place. Inside the stable Messenger asked Wade to help unharness the horses and as soon as he had fairly got to work he found himself surrounded, with four revolvers leveled at his head. He four revolvers leveled at his head. He quietly gathered around and followed the his own weapons were out of reach-and he quickly threw up his hands and sur-rendered as the prisoner of the shrewd operators. Thus Kid Wade was captured, after long search and the expectation of a bloody affray when he was finally run down. Mr. Messenger is to be congra-tulated upon the success of his scheme, pathos and power, and held the audience enchanted. Miss Etelka Wardell as Nellie Denver was equally good, her ringing refusal to be driven from her tumble-down cottage for her child's sake, who is lying at the point of death, touched the audience with grand effect, while throughout the rendition of the whole part she was true and strong. William will probably remain there over Sunday.

He is closely guarded in one of the rear rooms of the house and is heavily ironed.
He has received many callers to-day, among them Dr. Livingston, who has known him in the Niobrara region for

The fact that the Sperry Electric Light Motor company, recently organized in this city, are about to purchase a lot in this city, on which they will erect a building for their "central plant," is a renewed guarantee of their perfect confidence in the Sperry light.

The plant for the Millard hotel will be n operation within the next two weeks, when all can have an opportunity of witnessing the brilliancy and steadinesss which has made the Sperry light so justly famous, there being an entire absence of the features that have heretofore rendered electric lights so decidedly unsatisfactory

The Sperry company expect to be prepared to furnish their light within the next 60 days, and have already very flattering assurances of the favor in which their light is held by scores of citizens the house when they soon made known who saw it in operation at the Millard a their wants and were provided with the week or two ago, when it proved itself an accommodations desired by them. Held another of those enjoyable entertainments, (which have made this society so popular) in their hall, Brown's block, Fourteenth and Farnam streets. A very at ractive programme was presented and highly appreciated, particularly the piano forte solos by Professor Wathers, duets by Messrs. Morris and Saunders, zeither solo by Julius Festner, recitations by Hon. W. Turtle and Mr. . W. Loundsberry; also an amusing sketch in character by Mr. Gatchell, which caused roars of laughter. All present seemed to thoroughly to enjoy and appreciate the efforts of this society to amuse their friends, and will anxiously await their next meeting.
