"AT DAWN."

A Mill of Thirty-Three Rounds Fought Yesterday Near Omaha.

Smith, of Chicago, and Miller, of Omaha, the Pugilists.

The Fight Closed by a Foul by Miller and Smith Declared the Winner.

Yesterday morning as the lamps were fading from approaching dawn, a procession of fifteen or twenty carriages was winding its way out of the northern part of this city. The carriages were filled by the sporting fraternity of this city and a few gentlemen who were on their way to a point near Florence cut-off, where a fight with bare knuckles, for a purse of $300, was to take place between O. H. Smith, of Chicago, and Prof. Ed. Miller, of this city, under the Police Gazette rules. The party went to the road house kept by Sam Gardner, where they warmed and wine themselves. The night was a very cold one for this season of the year, and occasionally the snow fell and was blown into the faces of the party by the wind, whose velocity was nearly thirty miles an hour. From the road house the party followed the track of the Chicago, Minneapolis, St. Paul & Omaha railway nearly two miles, when the bottoms, were reached. Here the procession stopped, and a twenty-four foot ring was formed. Miller and Smith then alighted from their carriages and stripped bare to their waists. Smith was seconded by William McCune and Miller by Baby Barnes. Jack Caldwell, a sporting man of the city, was chosen referee. The men then entered the ring. Both were in excellent physical condition and determination was stamped upon the countenance of each one. Time was called and promptly at 7 o'clock the fight began. In the second round Smith won the first blood from a terrific blow which landed directly over Miller's left eye. Thirty-three rounds were fought in all. During the whole battle, which lasted an hour and twenty minutes, Miller forced the fighting, it being the tactics of Smith to act on the defensive and thereby exhaust his antagonist. Whenever Smith found himself cornered or the fight growing warm he would go to ground and at the same time called. This strategy on the part of Smith caused Miller to lose his temper several times and Smith was struck by him two or three times after time was called. Fouls were claimed by Smith's second but were disallowed by the referee. Finally at the close of the thirty-third round Miller struck his antagonist a blow on the face after he had gone down and after time had been called, McCune claimed a foul which was adjudged so by the referee and the fight ended, Smith being declared the winner. Blankets were thrown over the shoulders of the pugilists who were hurried into their carriages and driven back to Sam Gardner's where they were re-dressed and, later in the day drove into the city. Between one hundred and one hundred and twenty-five witnesses the mill and the best of order prevailed throughout, and when the foul was allowed by the referee not a murmur of dissent was heard. Neither one of the men was terribly punished and good feeling seemed to exist between the two during nearly the whole fight. Later in the afternoon Smith was seen at Higgin's restaurant, and with the exception of a couple of bruises on his face, nothing of the mill could be seen on him, although, it is said, he was severely pounded about the chest. Miller, it is said, has a face considerably scarred and bruised and has black eyes. The cold prevented the men from doing the work they otherwise would have done, but the fight, from beginning to end, was exciting. The affair was kept very quiet until nearly five o'clock Saturday night, when it became so generally known that the party, through fear of arrest, was forced to leave the city much earlier than it had intended to, and so great was the haste that when the procession had arrived at the cross roads just south of Fort Omaha, no one knew where the mill would take place. It was a grand sight for sporting men and was yesterday the topic of conversation in all classes. Before the party had left the scene of the conflict a challenge was sent Smith by one Donnelly, an Iowa man of local celebrity. The challenge was accepted and a deposit of money, $5 each, was placed in McCune's hands. The fight will be for a purse of $200, and the time and place are to be determined on Monday next. This is the second prize fight which the sporting men have gone from this city to witness. The other it will be remembered took place between Ben Hogan and Tom Allen in November of 1873 and was fought near Pacific Junction, Iowa, about twenty miles down the river. It was fought for a purse of $1,000. There were only three rounds when the ropes were cut and pistols drawn. The affair ended up in a general row. A man named Muldoon held the stakes, and taking advantage of circumstances, silently stole away with the money and was never seen afterward. Allen is now keeping a saloon in St. Louis. Hogan afterwards reformed and became a zealous Christian. It was only a couple of winters ago that he carried on a revival in this city. It never has been doubted that he was most honest in his convictions, and was working from the most sincere motives. When he was here carrying on his religious work, he was approached by a brother minister, who is somewhat fond of manly sport, who asked him what he thought of Allen's pugilistic abilities. Hogan's eyes flashed fire. "I can whip him yet," was his laconic reply. These two mills are all that ever taken place near Omaha. The Allen Hogan fight was attended by a great many, but the one of yesterday was witnessed by about only one hundred persons.

AN ACCIDENT.

A Street Car Runs Off the Track on St. Mary's Avenue.

Several Persons Slightly Injured and all Considerably Excited.

As street car No. 3 was coming down St. Mary's avenue yesterday morning, it became unmanageable by reason of the icy condition of the rails, and started down grade at a furious rate. The driver applied the brakes as best he could but was unable to check its velocity. The horses were hitched to a tongue attached to the car, but were perfectly powerless against the car, which continually increased in velocity. As it came onto the curve at the corner of Twentieth and St. Mary's avenue the horses were unable to keep in the tracks, the car running by them, throwing them down and dragging them some distance, and finally stopped after being struck on its side. There were thirty-four people in the car, most of them ladies on their way to church, several of whom were considerably injured. The occupants were unable to get out of the door of the car, but were helped out through the windows by those on the outside, whom the accident had called to the scene. All were excited and some indulged in screams. The injured were Mrs. Warren Switzer, Mrs. Van Antrom and another lady who resides on Park avenue, but whose name could not be learned. They were taken into the house of Mr. B. E. Kennedy, close by, and cared for there, and later in the day went to their homes. The car was almost a total wreck and one of the horses was so badly injured that it died before the street car was reached. The car driver says the track was thoroughly salted and sanded yesterday morning and all precautions were taken by him to prevent the occurrence. The accident was a most fortunate one and the wonder is that no more were seriously hurt.

"JULIUS CAESAR."

A Wretched Presentation by the Barrett Troupe on Saturday Evening.

An audience of unusual size and character assembled at the opera house on Saturday evening to witness the sublime tragedy of "Julius Caesar," and to judge of its treatment in the hands of the Barrett troupe. It is rather difficult to speak of the manner in which it was put on and do justice to the subject. There were many admirable points in the work of Mr. Barrett as Cassius, of Mr. James as Brutus, of Mr. Moseley as Marc Antony, and of Mr. Rogers as Cato, but these were so much marred by the almost ridiculous manner in which the other characters were portrayed that they seemed to have lost all their beauty. The gentlemen mentioned did magnificently, but it required from them almost continued herculean exertion to keep the entire play from passing the border line of the sublime into the field of the burlesque. The thorough weakness of Mr. Barrett's support was not apparent in "Francesca" and "Hamlet," and when it was announced in advertisements that "Julius Caesar" would be put on with the same company that was with Mr. Barrett at the Cincinnati dramatic festival, the public had reason to hope for something better. An actor of less established reputation than Mr. Barrett would scarcely have dared to present a play like that of Saturday evening without a powerful support, requiring, as it does, a good actor in every part. Most people in the audience probably surmised that the mob of five people in the forum scene were the usual superumeraries picked up in Omaha; this was not so, for all but one, we believe, belonged to the company, and had other important speaking parts in the play. This mob, individually and collectively, was fearfully and wonderfully made; in fact, four of them it might be said, relative to their understandings, that would take a whole forest of such legs to make a cord, and of one them that he possessed the underpinning of a Colossus and the arms of a living skeleton. It required constant effort on the part of the audience to suppress their laughter during the speeches of Brutus and Antony, and we really believe Mr. Moseley was called before the curtain at the end of the act as much from sympathy as for commendation. The manner in which Miss Maypenney came near destroying the tragic scene in "Hamlet" made doubly so, and in every character who breathed easier Saturday evening when it was observed that her scene as Calphurnia with Caesar had been cut out; likewise when it became apparent that the mob which officiated at the forum was allowed by the referee not a murmur of dissent was heard. Neither one of the men was terribly punished and good feeling seemed to exist between the two during nearly the whole fight. Later in the afternoon Smith was seen at Higgin's restaurant, and with the exception of a couple of bruises on his face, nothing of the mill could be seen on him, although, it is said, he was severely pounded about the chest. Miller, it is said, has a face considerably scarred and bruised and has black eyes. A KIDNAPPER.

Considerable Excitement in the District Court Saturday Morning by an Attempt to Kidnap a Child.

Since the opening of the Sinclair case in the district court a little seven year old daughter, a sweet little child, of Georgia Sinclair, has been in attendance at court with her mother and grandmother daily. Whether it is done to excite sympathy or what is the cause is not known. Mrs. Sinclair has two children, a boy and a girl, the legitimate fruits of her first marriage with a man named August Dibel. One year ago last fall Dibel left the Sinclair woman and last September he obtained a divorce from her in Colorado and was given custody of the child by the judge. He placed them in charge of Mrs. Sinclair's mother, but since that time according to the woman's story he has provided but $40 for their support. After obtaining a divorce, he was married and is now living with his wife at Fremont, in this state. Friday night the little girl above referred to, spent the night in the county jail with her mother, and Saturday, in company with Deputy Sheriff Crowl, was on her way to the court room. Just as she entered the court room and Dibel told the court that it was his child and that he had reached the head of the stairs leading to the court room, this man Dibel appeared upon the scene, and rushing past the woman, seized the child and started down the stairs on a run. The woman and child both screamed, and Mr. Crowl pursued the would-be kidnapper and rescued from his arms the child. The party then entered the court room and Dibel told the court that it was his child and he was not going to have her sit in court to excite sympathy for any such woman as her mother. Judge Neville informed the irate gentleman that there was a proper way to obtain possession of the child, and that he must resort to that way, as no kidnapping would be tolerated, after which Dibel left the room. It created considerable excitement in the court room for a time, but the affair was soon quieted and matters proceeded as usual.

DISTRICT COURT.

The Constitutionality of Mechanics' Lien Law Argued on Saturday Last.

In the district court on Saturday the forenoon was consumed by the trial of Georgia Sinclair before Judge Neville. At noon further trial of the case was postponed until this morning. The defendant was on the witness stand during a greater part of the forenoon testifying in her own behalf. The attention of the court, with both judges on the bench, was occupied during the afternoon by an argument on the constitutionality of a section of the mechanics' lien statute. This question arises out of the case of Ballou against Whitmore, tried last week, and in which a verdict of special finding unfavorable to the defendant was returned. This question created considerable interest among attorneys, and nearly all the members of the bar were present to hear the arguments pro and con. The suit of Ballou against Whitmore involved the validity of a material man's lien, and Hon. J. C. Cowin, who filed the motion to have the statute declared unconstitutional, made the point that a material man's lien is not a mechanic's lien, and therefore, as they both come under the title of "Mechanics' Liens," the statute is unconstitutional, as having no application to the one mentioned in the title. R. S. Hall, Esq., and A. C. Wakely argued that the liens had become the same from custom, and if the statute was to be construed strictly by its title, the common laborer could not have a lien, as he is not a mechanic. The position taken by General Cowin
