WRESTLING WITH A WILL.

Was John O'Brien Of Sound Mind When He Cut Off His Sons With $5 Apiece?

Yesterday afternoon a will case was put on trial, it arising from the dissatisfaction of some of the children of John O'Brien, of Neola, at the way in which he had disposed of his property. The claim set up by which to break the will was that John O'Brien was not of sound mind when he made it. By its provisions most of the property, including a fine farm and about $5,000 in money and personal property, went to the widow, to be held in trust by her for the youngest son, aged about 9 years.

JUNIATA'S JULIET

An Interesting Case of Love and "Loonacy" in Adams County.

They have a very fine case of litigation before local court at Juniata this week. We envy his honor Judge T. L. Brass his position just this once. There are four parties to the contest, classified as follows: Two young men who made a wager, one stake holder and a very nice young lady. As we learn the facts (before the trial) they are about as follows: The young men were enamored of and paying attention to the young lady. Each knew of the others admiration for the aforesaid young lady and each felt secure in his own right to her affections. Each had chaffed the other about the girl and made the usual amount of boast about how solid he was and each watched the other for any new developments and has considered himself the "Moloch" of the occasion. Not long ago these rivals made a bet, putting up their watches, which, by the way, were valuable ones. They placed these in the hands of the stakeholder. The terms of the bet were that one of the boys should cut the other out and win the young lady. At the time the bet was made these rival lovers were clerking in the same store. Their social standing so far as position was concerned, was even. Shortly after the wager was made, however, one of the boys lost his position and from selling goods over a counter took up the occupation of draying them from the depot. This seemed to loose him caste with the young lady in question. His rival took advantage of his unfortunate circumstances and pressed his suit more earnestly. He finally asked for and obtained the hand of the young lady to become his wife. The happy couple were married last Sunday, and now comes the law suit. The unfortunate young man who lost his situation as clerk, lost his girl and consequently his watch, has commenced an action in replevin to obtain possession of his ticker. Hon. S. L. Brass has issued the necessary papers, and we hope to give a full report of the trial.
