The History of the Unused Marriage License.

A short time ago some curiosity was ashamed of its recent assertions that the excited by the fact that a marriage licity council has nothing to do with the cense was procured at the court house by question of whether those who work on a young clerk in the city, who soon afterthe streets get their pay of contractors or wards returned it and had the clerk not. The heartlessness of the official scratch off the names. It was understood organ will be remembered when it next that the cause of the return was the fact wants the help of workingmen in some that the girl's father had got on to the scheme, and opposing it, had got his daughter away and balked the plan.

It now appears that the girl was attending school here, and was from s town to the eastward. The young man make room for several more. What if had a note from the girl's father to the the ordinance forbids it? Change the sisters at the school telling them to let On reaching here they met a friend of

of the young clerk's, and to him told

to see what the old man said in the note, excited a little too, come to think of it, so after some persuasion the note was opened and read. Then another envelope was got, the note enclesed, sealed and addressed again. By a little ingenious planning on the part of the clerk and his friend, a piece of blank paper was inserted in the place of the original note and the note itself was kept in their possession. Armed with this the young clerk and his friend went down to the boarding school, and thus thought to see the girl. The young clerk so well satisfied that he could thus see her that got a marriage license, it being his intention to skip out with the girl, if possi-ble, while the teachers were not noticing. and sent up to the young lady. She not knowing who was really in the parlors whom it is said she had no such special liking as for the young clerk, sent word back that she was not feeling well and could not see them. Of course there was no way for the young clerk to let her "watching and waiting for thee," and he and his friend had to depart in disgust. The two real messengers from her father, one of whom it is said, was favored as suitor by her folks but not by her, soon after came and presenting their note, found the envelope to contain only blank paper, and the trick was learned.

There was a hand of course, and the game was up. The girl's folks were very indignant, and her father came post haste and took her home. The young clerk disappeared for a day or two until the storm was passed. The license was scratched off the books, and attempts made to hush the affair up. The clerk at work at his desk again, and all is serene once more

The grand jury found no indictment, and the men were discharged. These men held a claim against Mr. Solomon for $61 wages due them, and they assigned their claim to A. I. Mr. Solomon did not appear, and judgment was taken by default, and an execution was issued and pinced in the hands of a constable, who brief in a crib of corn.
