RED OAK LEAVES.

Walks About the Town.

RED OAK, April 3 .- Doubtless the for their patrons, busy and industrious BEE of the gate city of the great west thought Red Oak had had befallen it, if absence of any report in THE BEE columns was any sign of such a calamity. If such thoughts were entertained, let them be as the idle wind. Red Oak is still alive and active, and the many BRES that wind their way to its portals daily find as eager and interested readers as ever. THE BEE possesses many friends here and in the county. Its unswerving fidelity to the interests of the farmer and laboring man, its uncompromising fight against monopolies and kindred frauds and swindles, has won for it hosts of staunch and unflinching friends. May its shadow never grow less.

The district court is in session and juite a large criminal docket is before it. Ine or two important cases will come up for trial. There is scarcely a doubt in the mind of any one acquainted with the history of the crimes committed and the parties indicted but what is satisfied that they are guilty; but influential friends and sharp lawyers are handling all of the known appliances to secure their escape from penalty. I asked Sheriff Palmer if he did not think they would be acquit-ted. He answered "No," and added: 'This is not a good time to acquit crimipals"-referring to the Cincinnati ricts. It is wonderful, the great number of the best and most substantial men of this town who sympathize with the original intentions and desires of that mass of men. There are none, of course, who for a moment countenance the subsequent violence and rapine indulged in by hem, but Red Oak has had an experience in the disgraceful clearing of proven murderers. Within the past year a brute that starved and beat his little boy to leath, who begged the district attorney to permit him to plead guilty to the charge of manslaughter, was sequitted by a Montgomery county jury. There was great indignation at the time, and people have remembered it since. The time must come when our courts will punish crime, or the time will come when courts will cease to be respected, and the people will administer justice themselves. F. P. Wormly, S. L. Scott and D. B. Gunn are building an immense roller skating rink and will soon have a grand opening. They are building sufficiently large to accommodate conventions, concerts, and, if necessary, any stray circus that may strike the town on a rainy day. The holiness people are running a series of gospel meetings for the purpose of converting the sinners into righteousness and turning their footsteps into the paths of peace and godliness. We suggested to them to try Dr. Young and The Alexander and if they succeeded in having them "born again" that the rest of us "poor sinful critters" could be easily caught, but when they saw the diminsions of the hercutean job before them they were demoralized and couldn't be induced to tackle it.

AN HISTORIC MANSION.

Memorles That Cluster About "Fighting Phil Kearny's" Home in New Jersey.

New York Herald.

During regatta week every summer the thousands of New Yorkers who visit Newark, opposite Kearny township, have features of the Kearny shore of the Passaic a stately blick mansion, which towers up over the tall trees some eight hundred feet from the river bank. This is "Kearny Castle," the splendid home built for himself by General Philip Kearny, who fell at the battle of Chantilly early in the war for the union. The place has been taken possession of by "Fighting Phil's" only son, Mr. John Kearny, and is undergoing extensive alterations and repairs.

"FIGHTING PHIL'S" SWORD, With pardonable and natural pride Kearny readily points out to visitors such mementoes as he possesses of his distinguished father, not the least interested of which is a beautiful sword, finished in of which is a beautiful sword, finished in the most exquisite manner, the one that was presented to Kearny upon his return from the Mexican war in 1848 by former associates in this city. It is a full size finest steel, ornamented in the richest style. The hilt is jeweled and the handle of beautifully chased silver. On the scabbard, which is of solid silver, is engraved a picture of Kearny and his dra-goons storming the gates of the City of Mexico, where Kearny lost his srm. was then a captain of United States dracoons. Also on the scabbard is this in scription:

Presented to Captain Phillip Kearry,
Jr., First Regiment United States
Dragoons, by his friends and associate members of the Union club of New York, 1848.

The sword is encased in a box of bird'seye maple carved out of one piece. Visitors are also courteously shown portraits in oil of General Scott and Worth, of the United States army, and the French general under whom Kearny served in Algiers; also oil paintings of a ball given by the American soldier to his friend in France after his graduation from the military school at Nemours, and of the school and grounds.

A PICTURE WITH A STORY. Hanging in the dining room is an oil painting by Randolph Rogers, a drinking fountain scene near Florence in Italy. There are six figures. The central ones are a peasant girl and her lover. She has just poured some wine into his glass from her flask and he is in the act of toasting her. She wears an expression which is a combination of suppressed delight and natural bashfulness. The other figures are the girl's father (a splendid head with the dome-like Shakespearean frontal elevation), younger daughter and two laborers. The originals of the two lovers are now the Baron and Baroness Cesari, of Fieseli, near Florence. When they posed for Rogers in his studio at Florence the girl made straw trimming for a livelihood.
When the two got married the husband sold what his wife made, and gradually increased his sales so that he had to employ others. Step by step he rose in business until he became immensely rich, and was finally ennobled by Victor Emmanuel. He and his wife now live in grand style at the place above stated.
Mr. Kearny vouches for the correctness of this story.

Another object of interest in the Kearny house, besides a dozen or more pieces of rare Italian marble statuary, is magnificent black oak bookease, which was purchased by General Kearny in Paris, and is nearly twice as old as the American republic, It is embellished with the most beautiful and delicate carving. A good story is told about one of the pieces of statuary—a figure of Ruth gleaning in Boaz's field. It was on exhibition at the Louis ville, (Kentucky) exposition, by permission of Mr. Kearny, who spent many years in Kentucky, where he married his wife. Some of the young ladies at the exposition remarked, looking at the Kearney "Ruth," that the girls were fond of beau abs. "Yes," said the scuptor, Handolph Rogers, when told of this, "even when they do tread upon his

THE MANSION ITSELF.

As already stated, "Kearny Castle" is situated on rising ground opposite Newark, about a hundred and fifty yards north of where the Erie railroad crosses the Passaic and the river road, and is reached from the road through a well shaded, wide curvular avenue over quarter of a mile long, leading with a gentle rise to the drive encircled lawn or the eastern front of the mansion. The mansion, which was built in 1861, has a plain exterior, but is in excellent pro-portions. It has large bay windows on every side, and is two storries and attihigh. About a dozen wide stone steps lead to a roomy vestibule on the first floor. This vestibule opens into a spa-cious reception room and library, connecting with one room on the south, with two rooms on the west and by wide sliding doors with elegant platform staircase on the north.
