Steinmann were saved with the captain and five of the crew, whose names were not ascertained. They are on Sambro Light island, the only communication with which is by signals in rough wonther. To-night the weather is thick and rainy, and it is uncertain if any further particulars can be had. Reporters left here for Sambro by land, but the roads are bad. The very latest regarding the wrecked steamer is that of crew of thirty-nine and the captain and ninety passengers,

ONLY NINE REACHED THERE,

the captain, five of the crew, and three passengers. These are still on Sambro aland. Owing to a heavy sea the survivors are not likely to reach the mainland until noon to-morrow. No particulars can therefore be learned in regard to the disaster at present. The govern-ment steamer Newfield left this city this afternoon for the wreck. The for is so thick that it is impossible to reach the fatal spot. The captain thought it imprudent to go nearer the wreck than five miles. He will make another effort to-morrow to reach the spot where the steamer was lost. Steam tugs sent out

FAILED TO REACH IT by ten miles. A wrecking schooner with divers will leave in the morning to recover bodies and that portion of the crew that can be saved. It is believed the vessel sunk on White Horse shoal, within a short distance of Sambro island. The exceeding roughness of the sea was the probable cause of the rapid breaking up of the wrecked vessel The captain of the Steinmann, having only been in this port three times, was probably unaware of the dangerous coast around Sambro, or of the awful peril he was in un-til too late to avoid the disaster. Tugs which lef there for the scene of the wreck have returned without being able to reach the neighborhood of the steamer, owing to the rough sea. Another attempt will be made in the morning to reach the wreck if the weather moderates. The Steinmann had five bulkheads. Her engines were 132 horze DOWST.
