BLOOD-THIRSTY BROTHERS.

Fiendish Duel to the Death in Maryland.

Special Dispatch to THE BEE. BALTIMORE Md., April 22d .- A fatal duel was fought yesterday at Cockeysville, a small town in Baltimore county, the principals being two brothers-in-law named Charles Brown and Joshua Gill. The fight was brief and bloody. The distance was so short that the antagonists thirsting for each others blood could almost have touched each others finger tips, had they held out their arms to full length, and they glared at each other like wild beasts, their intense hatred being observable even at this dread moment. But two shots were exchanged, and as the second bullet sped out from Gill's gun, Brown dropped, mertally wounded. On motion of Mr. Sherman (rep. O.) it was so amended as to make the examining officers of the treasury, officers to finally examine bills for disbursements, the bills to be in the first instance sworn by the party presenting them, and certified to by the judge.

Mr. Ingalls said the machinery created by the bill would be expensive. There would, he thought, be at least 250 commissioners appointed at once, and there would be the whole number of supervisors required by the act. That would involve an appropriation of not less $150,000 to $800,000, in addition to the amount already appropriated for the United States courts. All the scandals of the bankruptcy system had grown out of the enormous expenses it envolved. Amendments were proposed by Messrs. George, Sherman, Hoar, Ingalis, Edmunds, Morgan and Van Wyck.

The bill as amended was reported from the committee of the whole and passedveas 32, navs 15. The chair then laid before the senate
