A DOMESTIC TRANSACTION.

Indignation of a Sensitive Husband at Spokane Falls.

Duties Inter-Montana.

A story of a strange and unnatural domestic incident, the absolute correctness of which is vouched for by a responsible gentleman, comes up from the Couer d'Alene country. In Spokane Falls there lived a man named Kinney with his wife and one child. They kept a boarding house which was under Mrs. Kinney's charge, and her husband, it appears was engaged in transporting goods on a pack train from the Falls to Eagle.

The nature of his occupation prevented his being at home all the time. His wife it appears had hired a French cook named Giraux, and insisted on keeping him in spite of the fact that the boarders were loudly complaining of his execrable cooking. This circumstance and the fact that Giraux seemed to feel quite as much at home in the parlor as in the kitchen aroused Kinney's suspicion for his wife was not like Cousin's. To satisfy his apprehensions, he started a week ago Monday with his mules on one of his regular trips to Eagle City, but camped when a few miles distant, and about 10 o'clock that night returned suddenly to his home. He dispensed with the formality of knocking, and walked into his bedroom where he was confronted with convincing evidence of his wife's infidelity. For an instant the injured husband was struck dumb with amazement. To think that the mother of his child, the woman who only a year before had sworn to love, honor and obey him, the one who he supposed to be honestly sharing his troubles and joys in the hope of a future prosperity, had so basely betrayed his confidence was wormwood to his soul.

But Kinney was not the person to waste time in vain regrets. He was a sensitive man, and the sight which at first froze his blood the next instant caused it to boil with indignation. Without a moment's hesitation he pulled out a murderous looking knife and was in the act of springing upon the guilty pair when Giraux waved his hand and made the following cold blooded proposition: "Kinney," said he, "I have done you a great wrong. Your wife no longer has a claim upon you. You will not wish to live here any longer. What will you take for your house, your business and your family?"

Kinney reflected on this novel proposition some time. Finally great overcame the desire for vengeance. "Give me nothing," he hoarsely cried, "and take everything I've got."

The money was counted out at once by the Frenchman. Kinney immediately left for Eagle City where he bought an interest in a valuable placer mine, and Giraux, blowing out the lamp, entered into actual possession of his new property. Mr. and Mrs. Giraux are now in Spokane Falls in the full enjoyment of domestic happiness, and the baby is as pert and chipper and sassy as though it had not been thrown in "to boot" when the purchase of its mother was effected.

MEN'S SUMMER WEAR

From Neckties to Pumps and From Gloves to Hosiery.

Dark-blue serge and flannel suits made with a few coats will be extensively worn this summer for every day.

Very fashionable summer ties are made of satin and show fawn and lavender grounds covered with small blue, gold or silver polka dots. They are reasonable in price and wear well.

The most popular handkerchiefs for young men are of fine cambric or linen, with a wide hem of cambric, on which designs of rings are interwisted, canoes, hoes and arrows, tennis bats, etc. They are carried in the upper outside pocket with just a little corner showing.

All decided colors except dark blue are eschewed in neckties.

Collars are still high, but are cut off a little at the corners.

The most fashionable hose are fine thread in delicate plaids, such as gray and blue, fawn and brown, olive green and brick red, old gold and olive, etc.

Patent leather pumps are still fashionable for evening wear.

Straw hats are much the same as those of last year. Coarse Milan straws are preferred by young men.

The fashionable shoes are still pointed but are made much longer than the feet. They are therefore quite comfortable, but are only worn by men with small feet.

Tennis shirts will be worn at the seaside and in the mountains. Dark-blue with an old gold or crimson being the favorite. Boys will wear them in both city and country, with lawn-tennis shoes and crimson or dark-blue surah silk ties.

Lavender and tan kid gloves are the only kind worn.

Photographs of Prominent Men.

A Washington photographer says he has made portraits of President Arthur and of any other public man. Speaker Carlisle comes next. Mrs. Logan's portraits are much in demand.

Daily, in advance of the opening of the ticket wagon, at slight increase of price, a certain stipulated number of tickets, the main show. "A side show privilege" has been known to sell alone for $30,000 for a single season with a large and popular circus, and a "ticket privilege" for the same length of time has brought $7,000. Sometimes circus managers who had good popular names, but who were financially ruined by a disastrous season, have been put on their feet again peculiarly and started upon a new era of prosperity by the sales, in advance, of their privileges for a single season. Shows have been started entirely by the money paid for privileges.

Speaking in regard to the rumor that the Roman Catholic church in Iowa may be divided into three dioceses, the Western Watchman, published at St. Louis, and a leading paper of the Roman Catholic church, thinks it is very probable, and that it had for a long time regarded the elevation of Dubuque to a metropolitan see as only a matter of time; that his grace of St. Louis has always thought that the different sovereign states of the union should have their own archbishops. The Watchman thinks, that in the event of Bishop Hennessy's becoming an archbishop that there will be another episcopal see, either in Des Moines or Council Bluffs. It thinks the former has the countenance, but that the latter is geographically preferable.

THE MOON INHABITED.

Towns, Villages and Cultivated Fields can be Seen.

At the astronomical observatory of Berlin, says a translation from Nya Pressen Helmsborg, a discovery has lately been made which, without doubt, will cause the greatest sensation, not only among the learned, but among the unlearned.

Professor Blendmann, in that city, has found, beyond a doubt, that our old friend, the moon, is not a mere lantern which kindly furnishes light for the loving youth and gas companies of our planet, but the abode of living, intelligent beings, for which he prepared to furnish proof most convincing.

By accident Dr. Blendmann found that the observations of the moon gave but very unsatisfactory results, owing to the intensity of the light power of the moon's atmosphere, which is that strong that it affects the correctness of the observations in a very high degree. He then conceived the idea to make the object glass of the refractor less sensitive to rays of light, and for that purpose he darkened it with the smoke of camphor.

It took months of experimenting before he succeeded in finding his right degree of obscurity of the glass, and when finally found he then with the refractor took a very accurate picture of the moon's surface. This he placed in a microscope, which gave the picture a diameter of fifty-five and one-half feet.

The revelation was most startling. It overturned all hitherto entertained ideas of the moon's surface. Those level plains which formerly were held to be oceans of water, proved to be verdant fields, and what formerly were considered mountains turned out as deserts of sand and oceans of water. Towns and habitations of all kinds are plainly discernible, as well as signs of industry and traffic. The learned professor's study and observations of old Luna will be repeated every full moon when the sky is clear, and we venture to predict that the time is not far distant when we shall know more about the man in the moon than as being an agent in English politics.

In 1874, Dr. Hammond was chosen Professor of the diseases of the Mind and Nervous System in the medical department of the University of the City of New York. It has since occupied that chair and has won a magnificent fortune in the practice of medicine. His wife has contributed vastly to his success. By her hand most of the doctor's more famous works have been transcribed from his notes. "Sleep and its Derangements," "Insanity and its Medical-Legal Relations," "The Phrenology and Physiology of Spiritualism," and "Insanity in its Relation to Crime" have all been written with her loving aid.

Two children have been born to Dr. and Mrs. William A. Hammond. The son follows his father's profession; the daughter is married to an Italian nobleman, the Marquis di Lunze.

The Columbus Democrat is counting the chickens before the shells are cracked. Here is an echo of the cry which has been raised in Shell Creek: "Ezra, ye hosts of Israel, for the day of deliverance is at hand! Jericho is captured, the gates are being thrown down, the trumpets are sounding and our battlements tremble from turret to foundation stone. November will hear the grand march and the triumphal chariot of victory will make the old arches of heaven ring."

MULHATTEN IN KENTUCKY.

A Wonderfully Well-Told Life About a Homeless Man.

Cincinnati Times-Star.

Two days after leaving Harboursville (Ky.) I spent the night at the cabin of a poor farmer among the hills, and after supper some one spoke of Hector Davis, "the man without bones." I immediately asked what was meant by the expression, when my host explained that Hector Davis was one of their neighbors, living some three miles further on among the mountains, and that he actually had not a bone in his body.

As I expressed some skepticism, he volunteered to show me over to Hector's the next morning. We knocked at the door of the Davis cabin about 9 o'clock the next day, and the first thing that struck my attention upon entering was a middle-aged man sitting bolt upright, and supported by a rude and peculiarly-shaped framework. He was introduced to me as Hector Davis. I grasped his hand upon first entering, but his fingers all rolled up together like a cabbage leaf in a mushy sort of way that made me glad to let go of them. Taking hold of his limbs they yielded to the pressure until they were flattened out twice their proper width. The only indication of bone was in the skull, which, while pliable almost as sole leather, still offered a kind of protection to the poor fellow's brain. He shuffled off his slipper and requested me to step on his foot. I did so, and it at once spread itself out until it looked as if a railroad train had passed over it. It slowly resumed its natural shape, but it was fully a half hour before he was able to get the foot in his slipper again. "Perhaps you would like to tie my leg in a knot?" he suggested. I found no difficulty in performing this feat, while my friend accomplished the same with the other leg, and after we had also tied knots in both his arms he presented a very knotty problem indeed, and one that would have set a professional contortionist crazy. When we had unraveled all the knots and straightened his limbs again, he requested us to lift him gently from his framework and place him on the floor. This we found no easy task, for his body slipped about in our arms like an eel, and it was only by securing a firm grip on his clothing that we managed to keep him from falling. We finally succeeded in straightening him out upon the floor, and then my friend, who seemed to thoroughly understand the boneless man, seized a barrel standing near, and which I afterwards learned contained turpentine, and, swiftly un-lidding it, at once proceeded to roll it over the prostrate Davis, from his toes up to his chin and back again to his toes. The only manifestations of pain he made was when the barrel passed over his head and lungs, but it left him in a horrible shape. I can only describe it by comparing it to that of a man made of mud and then thrown up and flattened against a wall. While his body was assuming its former shape, I learned from his old spectacled mother that Hector, who was 40 years old, had always enjoyed excellent health and provided well for her until the beginning of this peculiar affliction two years ago. She did not know what the doctors might think of her Hector, as she "had not seen a doctor up in them hills for nigh on to twenty year."
