The Craze for "Matching" Coins and Other Devices,

The new fashion of running a shop devoted to fine groceries in connection with a saloon is spreading rapidly up town. Heretofore the establishments of this sort were confined mostly to Broadway, There are now in the neighborhood of Madison square a number of stores in which canned goods, pickled meats and fruits, fine crackers, and countless other little luxuries, are temptingly displayed. A party of five or six men passing through these well-ordered rows of toothsome-looking delicacies very often stop and examine them. He stopped and looked at the jar interestedly and then said, "I'll match any man in the crowd for this." He was immediately taken up by the other three men. They began to match and kept it up until they had bought $10 or $12 worth of food of various sorts. They had pickled tripe, pickled pig's feet, pickled salmon, various kinds of biscuit, preserved fruit, a bottle of blackberry brandy, some canned asparagus and some extract of beef. While the matching was going on a quiet and demure young clerk carefully took down the goods that were matched for and put them on a counter. Then he took a little book out of his pocket, took the names and addresses and collected the money from the unfortunate ones. Then he went quietly back to his desk and went on tiguring at his books.

"Is there much of that sort of thing done here ?" "Oh, no end of it" he replied briskly. "Every day gentlemen come in here and
