A BUSINESS-LIKE BOOTBLACK.

The Number of His "Shines" Determined by the Weather.

New York Times.

"Please, Mister, read me the weather perdition," pleaded a diminutive bootblack, dancing along beside a gentleman who strode across City Hall park with a newspaper before his eyes yesterday morning.

"What do you want with the signal service prediction?" asked the gentleman in amazement. "Clear weather, with light showers—that's to-day's weather. "Haer, shine 'em up and tell me your little game."

"No game at all; it's straight biz," said the boy, unlimbering his box and falling to work with a will. "You see, I work only on Saturdays and after shool hours. I go to school, you know. Mam wants me to. She makes pants for a store—no, trousers she makes me say—and she gets a dollar and a half a dozen. Then there's Jimmy—that's my brother—he works in a printing-office. He's 14, and he makes four dollars and a half a week. There's one little fellow—he's too little to do anything. I had a sister once, but she's dead, you know. Me father? Oh, he's dead—no, I mean he don't live with us any more. It's about the same thing, ain't it? He used to be an ironsmith in Brooklyn. He made big wheels and things in a big shop. He used to beat me when he got—got—when he had been taking too much liquor. I don't care if he never comes back. We have more to eat now, and mam don't cry any more. I guess we can get along if mam don't get sick again. We live down on Roosevelt street. I charge only 5 cents, mister; here's your change. Keep it? Thanks. I'll give the extra to little Bill."

"But, see here," said the gentleman, as the business waif began to look for another customer, "how about that signal service report?"

"Oh, yes. Well, every morning I get the weather, and then I can tell how many shines I will have. If it's showery, like to-day, I do well—ten or twelve shines—but on sunny days or rainy days I won't get but five or six. You see, the weather fools 'em. A gent—I mean a gentleman—gets his boots muddy in the rain, and when the sun comes out he gets 'em blacked again. Then, if there's more rain, he has to shine 'em up again. On a day like that I hire a boy to help me. I give him half what he makes, or rent him a box and brushes. That's what I want the weather perdition for. Hey! Shine?" and with a shrill whoop the future alderman disappeared beneath the overhanging avoirdupois of a big man who had emerged from an unsuccessful encounter with Broadway mud.

CONVINCING.

The proof of the pudding is not in chewing the string, but in having an opportunity to test the article direct. Extraordinay Surgery.

N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.

A German medical journal, commenting upon an experiment in the transplatation of skin recently performed in one of the hospitals of Vienna, compliments the surgeon on the daring origality of his operation, and then proceeds to discuss some of the strange issues of science raised by it. The operation which or German contemporary regards as original consisted of the dissection of a considerable area of skin from the body of a person who had been dead four hours, and its transfer to the excoriated surface of a living patient. The scientific questions raised are no doubt as interesting as the operation is revolting; but the German savant is in error when he speaks of the latter as original. The first attempt to transplant the skin or any other tissue from the dead body or the living was performed in Bellevue Hospital in New York city, some months ago, by Dr. Gerdner, a young surgeon connected with the institution, who has since made his mark in experimental studies of the action of anæsthetic agents. The patient was a boy of fourteen whose arm had been denuded by a stroke of lightning, which oxfoliated the skin from the shoulder blade to the elbow, so that it came off in an unbroken sheet. As not only the cuticle, but the dermis itself was removed from this large area, and the latter is not reproduced in the healing process, the boy's arm, when cured, would be covered with a hard, purple, irregular contracting scar, which would render movement of the muscles painful, uncertain and difficult. It was this consideration which led the young surgeon to contemplate the daring and original, but revolting remedy. The body of a German who had committed suicide was brought in and transferred to a slab at the morgue just as Dr. Gerdner was examining the injured arm. The suicide was a young man of twenty-five, in excellent health apparently. Proceeding to the dead room, scalpel in hand, Dr. Gerdner carefully dissected from the hip of the dead man a sufficient section of the skin to replace that which the lightning stroke had exfoliated. This he cut into small squares, which he applied like a tessellated pavement to the inflamed surface. The daring experriment was successful; circulation in the dead tissue was re-establishsd; its nerves and glands resumed their functions, and the skin of the injured arm was restored; only two or three of the small squares failed to take, and these interstices filled by granulation. Curiously enough no busy reporter stumbled on a clew to the facts, and it was left for a German surgeon to undertake the operation and obtain the credit that really belongs to an American.

No Race-Courses in Texas.

From the Houston (Tex.) Post.

Two years ago the lovers of noble sport had a holiday in Texas. Houston inaugurated a spring and fall season of horse-racing, and was followed by Galveston, Dallas, Corsicana, Gainsville and other cities. Noble steeds and gaily clad jockeys frequented the tracks, clubs were organized to encourage the sport, and visitors flocked from far and near to witness the equine sports. What has become of the steeds, the jockeys the track the clubs and the visitors? All gone. The Post believes there is no more enthusiastic lover of sport on the face of the globe than the average Texan. He takes a keen delight in every physical exercise, in the display of physical excellence by man and beast. It was not long ago when sporting journals in the north wrote with delight of the gigantic hunting contest between the Hutchinson and Talliaferro corps of huntsmen. It is said that even in the halcyon days of hunting such a magnificent contest could not have been rivaled. It was also said that the teeth of the northern hunter stand on edge when he thinks of the glorious chances of a Texan brother to indulge in noble sport to his heart's content. But here, on the scene of the battle-field, we cannot as much appreciate the peculiar fascination of sport as the Northmet. Our country abounds with game, and Texas containing a nation of marksmen, the desire for perfection and distinction is not as pronounced as in the north. It might be that the selfsame lack of appreciation has been the cause of the disbandment of the jockey clubs. The average Texan is an expert horseman, and his opportunities for seeing and riding noble and fleet-footed animals are so many that the celebrities of the race-course have no fascination for him.

What Three Applications Did.

SCHMIT AND BUCKLEY.

The Advance Guard of the Democratic Hosts from the Pacific Slope.

Chicago Herald, June 27.

The advance guard of the Pacific coast delegates to the Democratic convention arrived yesterday morning over the Rock Island. They were Matt Canavan, a burly miner of Nevada, and Maurice Schmitt, a lively little party, five feet or more in height, of San Francisco. Mr. Schmitt doesn't weigh much, but is said to own a cable street road in San Francisco the income of which is about $6,000 a month. Mr. Schmitt is generally called "Maurise;" first, because that is his name, and next because he would rather be called "Maurice" than Mr. Schmitt—it is more high sounding. Maurice Schmitt is one of the few men of San Francisco whom Flood, Mackey and the others who wiped out mining speculation did not quite "down." Starting from a poor boy, a clerk in his father's broker's office, then a curbstone broker, then a member of the "hoodlum board" a term of contempt because that board was "little," Mr. Schmitt advanced until he paid the highest figure ever given for a seat in the regular stock board of San Francisco. That was $40,000. He is a shrewd, keen, wiry speculator, and at the height of the "Sierra Nevada" speculation six years ago was worth perhaps $600,000. The break came, but "little Mrurice" was not left. Out of the general wreck of mining speculation, he probably has to-day $200,000 outside of his cable road. He placed his finger alongside of his nose, yesterday, in talking to the Herald man, and said, "I'm going to have all the fun your town affords, and I guess the cable road can foot the bills. Politics? You musn't talk on that because I don't know where we do stand. I'm going to take my wife and babies to New York to-night to stay while I am here helping to make a president. Have you seen Cris. Buckley?"

Cris Buckley is the great California Boss. His arrival yesterday at the Grand Pacific was a genuine surprise to those who know anything of Pacific coast politics. Buckley is the blind leader in what some people delight to call a blind hoat. He controls the democratic party on the Pacific coast, and aims to be on the Pacific what John Kelley and Tammany are on the Atlantic. Mr. Buckley, however, aims too high. He comes nearer being the Mike McDonald of Chicago than the John Kelly of New York. Mr. Buckley keeps a saloon, and not a very fashionable one. His salcon, though, is a political headquarters, and from that issue the ukases which govern the party in California. Buckley is the head and front of the opposition to Justice Field in California. A week or so before the republican convention met Buckley had his ward clubs in San Francisco declare against Field. Every one did it. Frank Pixley, editor of the Argonaut, who was here at the last convention, said boldly: "That is a sell-out game. That," said he, "means that Buckley want to be 'seen' by Field's managers. Mark my words, now," he added, "you will see 'Cris Buckley on here, hunting for a sack of money. Buckley controlled the late state convention. That instructed also against Field, and to a certain extent, bought the democracy of California into prominence, because it was the first instance known where instructions were given by any state against one of its own citizens."

When Buckley arrived in Chicago yesterday the Herald man remembered what had been said. Buckley is accompanied by his wife, and a hired man whose business it is to lead him around. "I am on my way to New York," said Mr. Buckley, "but hope to get back by Wednesday or Thursday next to receive the rest of the boys." Mr. Buckley is a young man of not more than thirty-six. He is slender, very genteel looking, dresses nobby, and evidently cultivates an air of dignity.

"What are you going to New York for?" asked The Herald man.

"To consult an oculist and see if any thing can be done for my eyes."

As Mr. Buckley has been blind for ten years and all oculists gave him up long ago, the spirit of mischief led the scribe to say.

"There is an excellent oculist down in the old Washington Hotel Building, on Lower Broadway. Cyrus W. Field is his name."

"Cris" winced just a trifle, but his face was calm and placid. "Indeed," he said, "I heard of him."

"There is another," said The Herald man—"His brother, David Dudley Field—he is up town somewhere. Both of them are fine oculists, and both have had wonderful success in treating your peculiar form of disease."

"Oh! you go to the devil," said Mr. Buckley. "I know not what you are driving at. I know you. Excuse me I've got to go to dinner. The train leaves for New York at 3:30, and I've got to hunt up Maurice Schmitt, who has my passes.

They Had Met Before.

New York Sun.

A young man who had been following a lady through Thirty-seventh street drew alongside of her at Fifth avenue, lifted his hat and observed:

"Haven't I met you somewhere before?"

"Once, I think," answered the lady.

"I knew it," said the young man, with a self-satisfied smile; "and you've been in my thoughts ever since."

"I thought you had not noticed me particularly," said the lady. "I met you two weeks ago at your wedding. Your wife is my cousin."

A Robber in the House.

Arkansaw Traveller.

The clock struck "3," two of the children awoke with "squalls" and Mrs. Mickson, turning over with a flounce, called to her husband, who was lying in an adjoining room:

"Peter!"

"Well."

"I believe that there's a man in this house."

"Yes, I'm here."

"I don't mean you. I smell a cigar."

"Where did you get it?"

"I haven't got it, you greenhorn. I mean that I smell cigar smoke. In know that somebody has slipped into this house, and you needn't say there hasn't," and she arose and looked under the bed.

"Who do you think it is?" asked her husband.

"It's a robber, that's who."

"Do you think that a robber would come around a man's house and smoke cigars?"

"It makes no difference. I smell cigar smoke," opening the closet door.

"I smell cigar smoke, too," said the husband. "I have been smelling it for some time."

"Get up and help me look for it."

"What, the smoke?"

"No; the man."

"Come on, and I think we can find him."

Mrs. Mickson entered her husband's room and found that gentleman lying on the bed smoking a cigar.

"I don't believe you have good sense!" indignantly exclaimed the wife. "Why didn't you tell me that you were lying here smoking like a fool?"

"Because I am not smoking like a fool."

"Oh, you think you are smart," and the lady went back and tumbled into bed.
