Several Exciting Squabbles at the Circus Grounds.

Yesterday afternoon about the close of the show there was a lively time at the circus ground and there was so many rows going on at the same time that the mayor telephoned to the central station for all the police to come down, and reports of stabbing, shooting and clubbing speedily went up and down the streets.

in the meantime five husky railroaders in front of one of the candy stands got into some difficulty with the candy butchers. Words led to blows, and soon there was a lively melee in which eight or ten were concerned.

There was also two minor fights in the big tent during the concert, the difficulties being between the lemonade peddlers and outsiders. The police had to interfere, and in one case a revolver was drawn by an officer.

Yesterday was a perfect one for a circus day. Bright skies, hot enough to make the lemonade vendors rich, calm enough to quiet the nervous ones who always shriek at the least flutter of canvas.

Street Supervisor Hardin by request of the council has prepared a list of the sink-holes and streets that especially need prompt attention on account of stagnant water, breeding cholera and malaria.

The city officials are still advertising asking "persons knowing of any nuisances in the shape of filth, stagnant water or anything which gives out noxious or unhealthy smells to notify the officers, the mayor or some of the aldermen."

A Great Moral Show. Detroit Free Press. Two or three weeks ago, a pedestrian who was passing a house on Ripelle street, heard the sounds of a struggle going on, and as he looked in at the front door or a boy about 13 years of age, who sat in the hall, quietly observed:

"It's only the old folks, having a little row, stranger." "Do they have em often?" asked the man.

"Almost every day." "If I were in your place I'd stand at the door here and charge ten cents admission fee. It's worth the money to see a family riot like this, and you might as well make a few dollars as to let the chance slip."

"The boy said he would think of it, and the pedestrian waited until the man had choked the woman as black as a plum and then passed on. Yesterday he changed that way again, and there was another row going on; and the same boy sat on the door-step."

"I'll see the show," said the man, as he pulled out his wallet. "Has my advice profited you?" "Stranger, I can't take your money," replied the lad.

"Why?" "Because I'm a square boy. For a week or so every night in her was squares a dice and worth the price of admission, but as soon as a crowd began to come and the gate money ran up to eighty or ninety cents a day, and man began to holler on the public. That blood on his nose was put there half an hour ago, and man's black eye is three weeks old. They want me to stand in with them and deceive the public, but I can't do it. Let the best man win or quit the business is my motto. Pass on, stranger, for this is a put up job to gull the credulous public."
