Wolff & Recusing, were engaged in experiments endeavoring to produce an article similar to the French sardines They had a room fitted up in their store which no one was allowed to enter, excepting the two members of the firm and the Frenchman who was engaged in the experiments. On account of being unable to secure exactly the fish they needed, it seemed as if all their labor and efforts were to be of no avail, and they were considering the question of aban-doning their project when Mr. Weiff, one of the firm, visited Eastport, Me., and, on seeing the small herring caught in that vicinity, which was then used for farming purposes, he felt that at last he had discovered the long sought for fish. As the resut of his investigations in 1876, he established a factory in Eastport and commenced canning. Since then there have been eighteen other canning factories established in Eastport, two at Robbinston, seven at Lubec, with one more in process of erection, three at Jonesport, and one each at Milbridge, Lamoine, Bass Harbor, Brooklyn and Camden, besides one at St. Andrews,

THE HERRING USED for the manufacture of the sardines are caught in the waters of Passamoquodda bay and vicinity. Large weirs are built, being constructed of piles driven firmly in a depth of water not exceeding 20 feet, while the space between the niles is filled with brush interlaced with the rails which surround the piles. A large opening in the enclosure is left, through which the herring enter at high water, and a drop seine is used to close the opening when the weir is well filled. Just before low water the fishermen enter the weir in a net boat, and, with a hugh scoop net, take the fish out and deposit them in the boat. The fish are offered for sale by the hogshead to the boatmen of the different factories-about seventy-five in number, each factory employing from two to six boatmen—and the bidding commences, which, at times, almost rivals the stock exchange; in fact, it is the sardine exthe factory, a small signal flag being run up to the top mast, to show the owners at the factory that fish are on the way. When the wharf is reached the fish are hoisted from the boats and placed in large tanks partly filled with salt water, to preserve them until they are all cut. Faom these tanks they are taken in large baskets to the cutting room and deposited on the long rough tables, where they are sized by the cutters, and by a dexterious sweep of their large knives, are quickly decapitated; the entrals being pulled out by the same movement. The operation is performed with such quickness that those skilled in the busmess will cut seventy-five a minute. Each cutter has a box which when full, is carried to the foreman of the room, and the cutter receives a fin ticket stamp ed with the company's initial and amount to be paid. These cutters are mostly boys and girls from 10 to 16 years of age,

This is done by placing them in tubes and salting them thoroughly, after which they are washed in several changes of water, and then placed in low, flat baskcts, when, after being carefully drained, they are hoisted into the flaking-room. The flaking is done by women. The flakes are of wire, nearly three feet long by 2 feet in width, and the fish are procedured as the procedure of the state of spread on, care being taken that space is The Pleasantry of Two Rich Sisters left between each fish to avoid trouble in baking. GERMAN PEULLIARITIES.

The Leipsic Fire Department.

From the Boston Transcript. A couple of days in Leipsic convinced me that the only feature that would interest the unmusical tourist is the fire brigade. I had the honor of inspecting this wonder in charge of a mighty officer with an American friend to act as interpreter. This is my first glimpse of the German fire system, and it has pursuaded me that aside from the good discipline enforced it is little less than a roaring farce. All the men and apparatus are stationed in one house, a pretentious brick building located near the center of apparatus the consisting or four hand engines, three steam engine, a fire escape, a few express wagons and hose reels. All these ma-chines are so hopelessly jammed together dormitories. The horses are harnessed if possible. and conveyed around the building to the apparatus rooms, the hand engines are meant that the vanguard set out at the experation of that time. Inasmuch, however, as the whole brigade attends every alarm, we must be at least twenty minutes difference in the time of change. If only a few of the weirs have the departure of the first engine and change. If only a few or the weirs have fish the bidding is spirited, and a high price is obtained for the haul; but, if fish are plenty they do not bring so high a price, and the bidding is attended with less excitement. When the industry first while the various machines are getting will the various machines are getting. less excitement. When the industry hist started $1 per hogshead was a good, fair price, within the last two years, as high as $30 has been paid for a hogshead. After the fish had been transferred to the boat of the highest bidder, a start is made for the highest bidder. The saddest wish in fifteen seconds. The saddest wink in fifteen seconds. The saddest feature of the Leipsle brigade to me, however, was the seeming inefficiency of the fire-extinguishing machinery. would be a discouraging task to water a lawn with those hand engines; in fact, they might have difficulty in fulfilling satisfactorily the role of face perfumers. There is just one point where this fire received hospitably.

Mrs. Ducker allowed the young men'to remain at her house for more than a fort-night. They wore their cadet uniforms, and cut quite a figure in and around New Rochelle with Mr. Decker's horses and carriages, which were placed at their disposal. Every day the young men and young ladies were out driving, making the dust fly behind them and attracting general attention. As New Rochelle is very cosmopolitan during the summer, nobody appeared to know who the par-ties were, and Mr. Decker did not, therefore, know what was going on.

THE TWO MARRIAGES. On the morning of June 30, after the oung men had been enjoying the hospitality of Mr. Ducker for about a weel they took the young ladies out to ride usual, and the young wives state that on this occasion each of the cadets made an offer of marriage.
