WAR STORIES. Gen Dodge on Men and Things—A Free Chat With Garth About Grant, Lincoln and Logan.

NEW YORK, August 17.—Meeting Gen. Grantville Dodge, who at one time commanded the Army of the Tennessee in place of McPherson.

"I used Alabamians almost entirely. In Northern Alabama there was a strong union feeling and I organized not only whites but blacks from that state into regiments.

Real Estate Transfers. The following transfers were filed in the county clerk's office yesterday and reported for THE BEE by P. J. McMahon, August 30, 1884:

Information Wanted. Bertie Saylor, aged 13 years, left his home at La Harpe, Ill., July 30, 1884. He was seen in New London, Iowa, August 2.

IOWA ITEMS. The Western Iowa Baptist association meets at Logan, September 5. A well organized band of house breakers are doing Sioux City and other river towns.

The completion of the C., B. & Q. from Chariton to St. Joe will be an accomplished fact inside of three months. Taylor Matthews, a well known citizen of Villisca, was run over and killed by a switch engine there on the 20th.

The fair at Sioux City begins on the 10th. Among the side shows will be a series of political parades by the different parties.

A fatal type of dysentery is prevailing in Wright county. It is mostly among children, though now and then an adult suffers. Griswold college, at Davenport, will probably put in the foundation this year for an additional college building to cost $18,000 to $20,000.

Charles Evans, of Redfield, was shot and instantly killed by a sneak-thief at a Methodist camp-meeting near that town on the 24th. The murderer was arrested.

Jacob Toole, between 65 and 70 years of age, was found dead in his pasture, near Lamont, where he had gone to catch a horse. The death was caused by disease of the heart.

During the momentary absence of the bookkeeper, the office of the Chicago lumber company, at Des Moines, was entered by thieves on the 25th and robbed of $2,000 in notes and $112.50 in cash.

The 8-year-old daughter of a Mr. Anderson, living near Wapello, was bitten on the ankle a few days since by a rattlesnake. By the judicious use of an anti-prohibition remedy, her life was saved.

At Marengo, on the 27th ult., the wife of James Miles shot herself with a revolver, in a fit of melancholy. The ball entered under the chin and came out buried in her nose. It was thought she would recover.

Charles Evans, a young man of Redfield, Dallas county, was killed Sunday night on the Methodist camp grounds near that place. The coroner's jury returned a verdict of "Death from a gun shot wound inflicted by hands to the jury unknown."

"About a year ago a wealthy farmer living just east of Des Moines became suspicious of the banks and withdrew all his money, $7,000. He got it in gold and buried it on his farm, where it is or was the last time he looked at it, on Sunday of last week.

The Iowa conference of the Methodist church will be held as follows: Iowa, at Ottumwa, September 3, Fair-top Foster; Des Moines, Red Oak, September 10, Bishop Andrews; Northwest Iowa, Spirit Lake, September 24, Bishop Andrews; Upper Iowa, Mason City, October 1, Bishop Bowman.

John Shannon, a brakeman on the middle division of the "Q," was struck by a train near Tyrone, Thursday night, and killed. His train had broken in two, and he was not back to the second section. While not positively known, yet it is reasonably supposed, that having tried waiting for the expected train, he sat down upon the track and fell asleep. A few moments later the rain came along and killed him.

The trustees of the New Melleray abbey, near Dubuque, one of the only two Trappist monasteries in the United States, have voted to rebound its indebtedness of $130,000 at five years, 6 per cent. These bonds were first issued five years ago to cover a sudden financial disaster after building a new abbey. Since then the Trappists have extinguished $75,000 of the debt and the bonds are at par.

The new asylum at Clarinda will be built in the shape of a "U," directly in front will be the building containing the living apartments of the officers and physicians, with the general offices. Upon this building will be erected the tower, which will be a commanding structure. Extending in an irregular wing on either side of this building will be eight buildings on the cottage plan, all closely connected by corridors. The stem of the "U" consists of a corridor 900 feet in length, upon which will be built the kitchen, laundry and engine rooms. The buildings will be of different heights, from two to four stories, according to location and use.

Within the quadrangle formed by the wings of the "U" are two open spaces which will be placed the apartment for the help and the workshops. The buildings proper will cover 162,000 square feet of ground. The buildings if placed in one continuous line would extend 3,268 feet or nearly two-thirds of a mile. The length of the wall line will make several miles.

"They were some of the finest soldiers in the world, and they had commanders in many cases superior to ours. For example, was one of the best cavalry commanders in history. I heard Gen. Sherman say that if he could only match Forrest with a man of equal enterprise many of his difficulties would fade. After Sheridan was taken away from that army Sherman never had much luck with his cavalry commanders."

"I used Alabamians almost entirely. In Northern Alabama there was a strong union feeling and I organized not only whites but blacks from that state into regiments. One of my agents in Alabama nearly lost his life, having been court-martialed for being a spy. He was a union man, and I employed him to check off the rebel forces going past his farm."

He would take note of their numbers, condition, arms, guns, and batteries, and send it straight to me. They finally suspected him and court-martialed him, and would have hanged him. I sent $5,000 of the secret service money in my possession to the brother of Jefferson Davis to defend that man and the defense no less than the relationship of this lawyer saved him. When they were removing him from one point to another he bribed his way off and came to me and I never let him go back into the south again.

"I was born in Danvers, Mass., now called Peabody. My father and N. P. Banks and Robert Rantoune were the three leading Democrats in that day in Massachusetts. Rantoune was a very remarkable person. After they passed on to the Republican party or passed out, Butler became the leading Democrat in the State. I was sent to a military school at Norwich, Vt., where I studied both military and civil engineering. I then removed to Iowa and engaged in railroad surveys, and was in that business the war. At one time I was absent among the Indians a year and a half. With the exception of the time spent in the war they were the happiest years of my life, because I was fully occupied. At the beginning of the war Simon Cameron gave me a regiment, much to my surprise, and I felt that I had a great responsibility to have 1,000 men to command, and wondered how I could get along with them. I was at the battle of Pea Ridge. Grant had promoted me from point to point. I got a division before I ever saw him. That was one of Grant's great points as a commander. It was not necessary to require him to get his confidence. If you did your duty and gave him results you know all the time that his eye was on you."

"Did you ever meet Abraham Lincoln?" "Yes, I first met Mr. Lincoln at Council Bluffs several years before the war. He had been employed in some railroad matter, and came out there to inform himself. He spoke to me at the hotel, and I suppose in the course of an hour, with a lawyer's capacity to absorb another man's knowledge, he got from me all he wanted. Years passed on, and during the war I received a telegraph dispatch from Gen. Grant telling me to go at once to Washington City and report to the president of the United States. It frightened me. I had raised a negro regiment, one of the first raised in the war, for the purpose of guarding my trains. I thought Lincoln might have disapproved of that work and I supposed I was going to Washington to be reprimanded, or perhaps removed. When I got to the White House Mr. Lincoln turned to me and said: "I met you six years ago in Iowa when you were surveying for the Pacific railroad."

"Yes, Mr. President," said I; "I remembered it, but I had supposed you had forgotten it." "No," said Lincoln, "I have not given you, believing that you could give me some advice on an important matter from your connection with surveys. The bill has passed for the Pacific railroad, and the towns along the Missouri river, Kansas City and others, are all working hard here to be made the initial point of that line, and want you to tell me which is the true initial point to begin the road from."

"I took a map and showed the resident the proper line of the road, and said: 'I have but little doubt that Council Bluffs is the true point to begin. Towards that place the railroads are coming from the east.' Mr. Lincoln heard me through, heard my reasons, and said: 'Now I am satisfied. That is all I wanted to see you for.' He then had the railroad to begin at Council Bluffs."

"Did you see any difference between the western and eastern troops?" "Yes. When I was at Petersburg there was a big fight, and I was struck with the great number of stragglers. We had nothing of that sort in the west.

Our western corps went to the war to fight, and not to sink off. When I was in Grant's eastern army it seemed to me that there were fewer stragglers coming in than there were fugitives going to the rear. Desertions were constant. Grant had difficulties in that eastern army no man was not with him in the west but he could not get the men to the east he desired to bring with him a number of his prominent officers. He wanted me to come, and McPherson, and Logan, and Sheridan. He only got Sheridan. When he came to the east he found that the jealousy of the eastern commanders of bringing in western men was so much that he could only venture to bring Sheridan, and for a long time Grant had to wait until Sheridan became effective in the valley before he could point away at Lee as he wanted to."

"Was Logan a good officer?" "First-rate. The only thing to criticize in Logan was his growing tendency when there was nothing to do, but as soon as there was anything to do he was busy and joyous. I think I never saw any commander whose personal influence over his troops was greater. He made a fine appearance, he was alert and loved to fight, and exposed himself. Our western men were a band of brothers."

"Was not McPherson killed in the action that you began?" "Yes, I had been ordered to take my command far off to our left and make a movement to get on to the Macon Railroad. The Confederates that very day had started a similar movement to get in our rear. They came through the woods in three columns. The middle column struck a mill-pond, I had my glass trained on them, and I saw something wrong with that middle column—that it hesitated and left a gap in their lines exposing one or the other columns on the flank. I sent a brigade to go pell-mell at that exposed flank, and the order was executed with such nerve and decision that the exposed column was knocked all to pieces. At that time McPherson, riding through the woods to see what the matter was, was shot."

"What do you think of the confederates and the way they were handled in the war?" "They were some of the finest soldiers in the world, and they had commanders in many cases superior to ours. For example, was one of the best cavalry commanders in history. I heard Gen. Sherman say that if he could only match Forrest with a man of equal enterprise many of his difficulties would fade.
