Piles

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in he back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, sym toms of indigestion are present, as flatuency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moistere like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching particularly at night after getting warm in bed, its very common attendant. Internal, External and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bosanko's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure where other remedies have failed. Do not delay until the drain on the system produces permanent disability, but try it and be cured. Schrotec & Becht.

The Breed of Hogs and the Feed.

When getting ready to fatten the hogs for winter killing it may not have occurred to many that there is profit or loss in feeding according to the breed to which the herd belongs. A farmer may feed liberally, and have no difficulty in getting his hogs in good condition, no matter what breed they may be; but there is economy in feeding for certain results, and any system practiced which demands an excess leads to waste and should be avoided.

Some farmers are very partial to large hogs, preferring to keep them until they are from a year and a half to two years of age, with the prospect of securing from each hog at least 300 pounds of pork, while other farmers think it more profitable to have their sows farrow in the spring, killing the pigs when they are about ten months old, when they are expected to weigh 150 pounds each. Both methods have their advantages. The large hog, if farrowed in the summer, may not only get a good start on late grass and clover, but may receive a large share of attention during the winter, when crops are not demanding labor, coming out in good condition in spring, and large enough to get much of its subsistence in the pasture. The spring pigs on the contrary, do not demand winter keep, and grow rapidly as the warm weather begins. Whether it is more profitable to raise two pigs that weigh only as much as one that is larger depends, therefore, upon the management, and the question is still debatable.

The different breeds, however, demand different treatment. Such pigs as the small Yorkshires and Suffolks, which mature very early, fatten readily, and in feeding them before penning them for being finally fatted the food should be of a character to promote growth rather than fat. One of the difficulties with these two breeds is that they begin to fatten at a very early age, and the carcass, when dressed, does not abound in as large proportion of lean meat as that of some of the larger breeds. The food, therefore, should consist of that which not only promotes growth of bone, but which is also of a dietary character. Large bone is not one of the good qualities of a hog, as it denotes offal; but to promote growth in the earlier stages is to build up the frame upon which the flesh may be placed afterward; and, as a rapid growth of the frame necessarily implies the quicker formation of muscle, the largest proportion of carcass may be secured when the proper time for feeding corn arrives. If the pigs are very fat when young they do not grow as rapidly as they should, and as some farmers prefer to kill them at a period when the fat and lean is well proportioned, the "hardening process," which is the final method, usually results in an excess of fat. The large breeds, on the contrary, do not cease growing until after entering on the second year, when they too, took on fat very quickly. Some breeds, such as the improved Chesters, Essexs, Cheshires, Poland Chinas and large Yorkshires, are preferred for their long bodies, excelling in the production of sidemeat, while the Berkshires are the producers of the best hams. In feeding the large breeds, yet it is best to have them well fatted at the time of penning them in order to avoid feeding a large lot of corn. The small breeds fatten quicker when penned than the large breeds because growth has ceased.

Nicknames of Generals.

From an article by George F. Williams, the well-known war correspondent, on "Lights and Shadows of Army Life," in the October Century, we quote the following:

"Every general of prominence had a nickname bestowed upon him by his troops. Some of these names were of a sarcastic nature, but usually they indicated the confidence of the men in their leaders or their admiration for them. General Grant was commonly known over the watch-fires in the army of the Potomac as 'Old United States,' from the initials of his name, but sometimes he was called 'Old Three Stars,' that number indicating his rank as lieutenant-general. McClellan was endeared to his army as 'Little Mac.' Meade, who wore spectacles, was delighted to learn that the soldiers had named him 'Four-eyed George,' for he knew it was not intended as a reproach. Burnside, the colonel of the first Rhode Island regiment, rose to the dignity of 'Rhody' when he became a general. Hooker never liked the sobriquet of 'Fighting Joe,' although he always lived up to it during his career in the field. Pope was saddled with the title of 'Saddle-bag John,' in memory of his famous order about head-quarters being on horse back. His men used to say that their head-quarters moved pretty rapidly at times. Sigel, the german general, was known in the other corps as 'Dutchy.' Hancock won the brevet of 'Superb,' from a remark made by General Meade at Gettysburg, when the second corps repulsed Longstreet's men. Humphrey, being a distinguished engineer, was invariably styled 'Old Mathematics.' The Pennsylvania reserves used to call Crawford 'Physics', he being a surgeon at the beginning of his military career. Logan, with his long black hair and dark complexion, was 'Black Jack' with his men. Sheridan, the cavalry leader, was 'Little Phil,' and Sherman's troops spoke of him as 'Old Tecumseh.' The sterling nature and steadfast purpose of Thomas earned for him the significant and familiar name of 'Old Reliable.' Alexander McDowell McCook, like Hooker, was called "Fighting McCook.' The New York city regiments in the Fifth corps changed Sykes to Sydney.' Halleck was derisively nicknamed 'Old Brains,' and Rosecrans had his name shortened to 'Rosey.' Lew Wallace was 'Louisa' to the soldiers under his command. He was a great favorite for his fighting qualities, and the soldiers adopted that inappropriate name for want of a better. Kearney, who had left an arm in Mexico, was invariably known in the ranks as 'One-armed Phil,' Butler was styled 'Cockeye,' for ovious reasons. Kilpatrick was nicknamed 'Kill,' while Custer was called 'Ringlets,' on account of his long, flowing curls: and so the catalogue might be prolonged indefinitely.

"Among the Confederates familiar nicknames were not so common as with the Federals. The soldiers of the Army of Northern Virginia usually spoke of General Lee as 'Bob Lee.' Little Mahone was best known as 'Skin and Bone.' Early was called 'Bad Old Man,' and Jackson will live in history as 'Stonewall.'"
