A TRIFLING TRICK.

The Corfidence Men Work a Countryman for a Sma" Sum.

Yesterday morning a man named Joseph Lyons, a good, honest sort of a looking farm hand, was made the victim of and look in on Barnum's show, was small but it was all he b-1. Lyorcame in and asked the storekeeper if he knew where he could find a man to work began talking to him about hinng out. They walked out together, and as the result of the chat, Lyons hired out at $22 a month. The stranger had a little business to do, and to save himself the wanted to the strow $20 of Lyons until they could get the latter's baggage, get the horses and wagon and drive up town, on the way home, and he could then stop at the bank and draw some money and pay him back. Lyons only had $12.50, and he let the stranger have $12. Soon after this the stranger gave Lyons the slip.

IT WON'T BURN.

The Old R lokery Insists on Continuing as an Ey sore Despite the Flames.

Yesterday morning about 9 o'clock it vas discovered that the old shell of a building standing on the corner of Broadway and Scott streets was on fire. The flames were confined to the upper part of the building, and the citizens watched it for a while, took out some of the cortents of the first floor, and after thinking that the flames might get too hot, sent out an alarm, and in the meantime wert through the notion of putting a few pails of water and doing a little stamping out. By the time the department had a lived there was no need of any streams. So in the course of a few minutes after the fire lads had left, smoke me pouring out again from under the roof, but the old building refused to be moved, and the fire getting discouraged went out of its own accord. Col. ENDORSED BEN BUTLER.

Gen, Martin Beem Once Did It Under Peculiar Circumstances, I endorsed Ben. Butler once, said Gen. Martin Beem y. sterday, under rather t ying circumstances. Soon after the war of the slave-holders' rebellion I found myself one of the advance guard of discharg I soldiery at Walla Walla, W. T. As I got out of the stage-coach that had brought me from the Columbia river that day I found the little frontier town wild with excitement over the killing of Ferd Patterson-a kind of Jesse James, who had become known along the whole cont for the number of men he had killed. He had just been shot while in a barber's chair, by a man named O'Donahue, whose life Patterson was said to have threatened. The dead desperado seemed rushing up and down the streets denouncing the union men and vigilantes, and declaring one or the other cused his death. The town, notwithstanding its which is so ready to condemn church buildings, will condemn this old rocker; always kept a small garrison, was a kind of city of refuge for all the "pushouts" of city of refuge for all the "pushouts".

taken from where he had been killed and laid in state on the floor of a large saloon adjoining. Being a stranger in the place I thought I might safely gratify a morbid curiosity, so I went in to look at the corpse. The saloon itself wen a picture-a long room the first partdevoted to the bar, in front of which Patterson lay, surrounded by a number of friends as enthusiastic in their admiration of the peauties of his character as Scotty was over Buck Fanshaw. Just beyond the counter were gambling tables, on which lay many thousands of dollars in bullion specie, and dust, with fare, keno, and roulet going on, while beyond all this a splendid orchestra was playing for some dancing girls, ("hurdy-gurdys") who were waltzing with big footed miners and unshorn frontiersmen, each one of whom suggested an ambulatory arsenal from

"Well, scar, ain't nothin' new for you to see one dead man after bein' in the army, is it?" and, looking up, saw facing me on the opposite side of the body an ingeno Oregonian with whom I had mr le a tri, up the Columbia a short time before. This introduced me. I was a stranger no longer. Terry was the first to ask me if I had served in the southern or "Yansee" army, and then others began to ply me with questions and volunteer their opinions about the --- "Yankee" war. 1 lon't think I ever wanted to go home so badly in my life rs I did just at that time. You know we all want to become angels some time-but of all times or place; to start for one, this seemed the least desirable. I tried to find an opportunity to retreat, but before it came I heard a oice shout: "Show him to me; where is he? Let me sec him!" As I had suddenly become a bigger man than the corpse, I felt that it wasn't the least bit arrogant in me to think that I was the object of his search, and in this I was correct. Elbowing his way through the crowd came a sandy-haired, rather refined looking man for that section at that time, pretty well "soaked," but

A man who harpooned two not long ago says that there is good deal of fun in spearing even a small shark. He used an ordinary aword tah harpoon, made of wrought iron, there feet and a half long, with a head that fastened itself securely in the fish. A long, light wooden handle, a coil of stout half-inch line, a keg buoy, for use in emergencies, completed his equipment Paddling along in the shallow water, after striking at and missing several he finally drove his iron clean through a six-footer just back of its head. It was not got into the boat, however, without a struggle. He was hardly a man-eater, but he looked savage enough to be one. There can be no doubt that these sharks would be dangerous if they knew their

After the shark was speared it kept gnashing its big jaws as it took the boat in tow and lashed the water with its tail. It was finally kiled.

A Plucky Engineer.

Houston Post. Many plucky engineers have crawled down on the cowcatchers of their locomotive, as the machine was rushing along at the rate of twenty miles an hour, and snatched a child or baby from certain destruction beneath the ponderous wheels of the iron horse, but none has as yet the experience of Christoval Mendo.a, an engineer on the Mexican railroad. The other day, as the train was nearing Jalapa, he discovered an old beggar, 101 years old, on the track. The old fellow, being deaf and imbecile, paid no atten tion to the shrick of the whistles, so Christoval climbed down on the cow-catcher, and snatched the old fellow, almost mummified with fright, up into a safe berth beside him just as the monster was about to grind him into a thousand
