WHY THERE ARE NO BIDS.

The Difficulties Experienced by the City in Getting Work Done.

An Instance Showing How Labor is Treated.

The city seems to be laboring under difficulty in getting street filling done. The council has advertised for instance, time and again for bids on certain work, as for filling Sixth and Seventh avenues. When bids do come in there is generally a margin figured on to cover uncertainties as to time and manner of payment. The council does not seem disposed to strengthen public confidence in the city's credit, and honest and safe financial policy.

The Bee has on several occasions shown up instances illustrative of the present mode of doing business. One of the most glaring of these is the manner in which they have treated Mr. Denton, a workman of small means, who did the filling of Eighth street. He long ago finished the work but the council has refused to issue to him the certificate of assessment against the abutting lots. The reason given for this refusing is that Denton has already been paid by the owners of these lots, and the certificate if issued should have endorsed on them the amounts he has received so as to protect the property owners from any danger of having to pay the full face of the assessment certificates. The council insists on Mr. Denton first reporting the amounts he has received, and then the certificates will be issued with these amounts endorsed on them. This yearning desire on the part of the council to protect the property owners sounds very pretty, but it does not appear that any property owner asks thus to be protected, but the desire seems to be to have the certificate issued to Mr. Denton. The fact is that some of the property owners advanced him money to pay his men, etc., while the work was in progress, the agreement being that when the certificates were issued, he would turn them over, and receive the balance due the property owners. Some of the property owners propose to hold these certificates, and in case it is ever decided in the courts that the city is liable for the filling, they will present the same for payment out of the city treasury. On account of some legal points they do not care to have it recorded on the back of these certificates that they voluntarily made partial payment on them. The city council for some reasons best known to themselves, refuse to issue the certificates without these inducements. In the meantime the man who has honestly and faithfully done his work, in accordance with contract, is kept out of his just pay, and cannot get the balance due him, because he cannot get his certificate. The city attorney is understood to advise the council to issue the certificate, and let Mr. Denton settle with the property owners. The property owners have shown their confidence in Mr. Denton by advancing him money with which to do the work, and the council says they must not have any more confidence in him. If the property owners were demanding protection of the council it might seem different, but both Mr. Denton and the property owners seem agreed on asking that the certificates be issued as in other cases. It is hard on Mr. Denton to be thus kept pinched, and it shows as in other cases that the present city government cases after all, very little for the working masses, except to give them weakened words and brittle promises to catch their votes.

Suspicious Fellows.

Two young fellows giving their names as Pollard and Baird have been stopping at the Ogden house for a few days. Pollard stepped into a Main street boot and shoe store and wanted to exchange a pair shoes saying they did not fit him. He said they were sent to him by friends in the east. The proprietor of the store noticed that they had J. M. Phillips' mark on them, and calling the fellow's attention to this, the latter then explained that he bought the shoes of the other fellow in town, and that he thought he could get them changed easier if he said he got them from the east. The fellow's story led to the suspicion of having stolen the shoes from Mr. Phillips' store. It appears that he had been into Phillips' store and picked out a pair of shoes, and had them called for later, and that he would pay for them when he got them. He had not paid again and it is supposed that he simply did this to get an opportunity to steal a pair, but did not get the right size. The fellow Pollard was followed up Broadway where he met his companion, Baird, and together they went into a store where their two valises had been left by them. It appears that they had snaked their grips out of the Ogden house without settling their bills, and before they could play any more pranks they were arrested and placed in jail, on the charge of beating a hotel. This will hold them until the larceny matter can be further looked into. It is said that the other fellow, Baird, went into Phillips' store also, and picked out a pair of rubber boots, which he told the clerk to lay aside for him. Whether he stole anything while thus in the store, is not yet known.

GOITSCHAKOFF'S TALISMAN.

A Diamond Ring Carried Into the Coffin of the Great Russian.

Every Other Saturday. One item in the will of the late Prince Goitschakoff created some little curiosity in the court circles at St. Petersburg. It had been observed that the Prince had always worn upon the little finger of his left hand a gold ring of apparently small value. It had evidently been a woman's ring, for it had once been ornamented with a cluster of small stones, which had long since disappeared, leaving the empty, unshiny place they had once occupied marked by a blackened spot upon the hoop, the latter being itself worn almost to a thread of gold, which still, however, clung to the bony finger, kept in place by the knotted joint above it. The importance attached to this ornament by the old prince can be judged when it is known that in his will he directed his executors to see that he was buried with his ring upon his finger.

It was only shortly before the prince's death that he disclosed the secret of the ring to his second son, Prince Constantine. It had been given long ago as a reward, when Queen Hortense was induced by his advice to leave Florence before the humiliation of being driven hence by the Tuscan government, which had declared itself the moral enemy of the Bonaparte family. The queen, who had the most urgent reasons for wishing to remain in Florence, hesitated to obey, until Goitschakoff having obtained secret information of the danger which would be incurred by her should she persist in remaining longer, took upon himself to send an officer with a government order for her immediate departure from the city.

A carriage and post horses were in waiting to convey her away, and in spite of the tears and sobs on her part, with exclamations against such tyranny on that of another person, her majesty felt bound to obey the order to escape the danger of incarceration and disgrace, with which she had been threatened. The carriage sped briskly on its way to the frontier, the queen inconsolable and bewailing her hard fate, when, at the first relay, what was her amazement to behold the postilion approach the carriage, and, humbly saluting her majesty, beg to wish her a happy and prosperous journey, informing her that at the same time that her husband had been occupied immediately after her departure by a troop of abridi sent to arrest her, and that everything had been placed under the government seal.

She was not slow to recognize Prince Goitschakoff in spite of his disguise, and her gratitude knew no bounds. She had left the palace so abruptly that she had brought none of her valuables with her. The little ring she wore upon her finger was the only souvenir she could bestow, and Goitschakoff used to declare that like the gem bestowed upon Prince Cheri in the fairy tale, it had often inspired him with good counsel when in moments of difficulty. Especially the latest period of his life, he could never speak of the Queen Hortense without emotion, and to the rival for whose sake she would have risked her liberty and consideration he always referred, not with hate and indignation, but with envy.

Despise Not the Day of Small Things

A Doomed Man Gains Time.

CINCINNATI, October 8.—The district court ordered a stay of proceedings in the case of Joseph Palmer, sentenced to be executed Friday for murder. They follow the ruling in the recent decision of the supreme court which makes it imperative that all proceedings in error must be first passed upon by the district court before going to the supreme court. This gives time to consider a writ of error.
