BOURBON BRILLIANCY.

The Democratic Display of Light, Music and Oratory.

Nearly Three Thousand Torches and the Streets Full of Visitors.

The Noted Speakers.

The democrats had even more of a demonstration Saturday night than they really planned for. Although they had promised in the papers to have 5,000 torches in the parade, they really did not expect half that number, neither was it expected that there would be so many people gathered here to see the demonstration.

The procession was formed on Sixth street and Broadway, and marched down Eighth street to Sixth avenue, then to Main street, up Main street to Broadway, up Broadway to the Methodist church, and then counter-marched to the speakers stand at the corner of Broadway and Bancroft street.

It was a grand sight, and the greatest political demonstration ever seen in Council Bluffs. Many who had previously placed the procession at from 3,000 to 4,000, but the Bee man, by an actual count, as the procession moved down Eighth street, found there were 2,689 in the line, including twenty bands.

The Harrison county delegation under command of Sheriff Garrison, presented a fine appearance, the uniform of the Logan club being very handsome, and the Logan cornet band, the Northwestern drum corps furnishing excellent music.

Dunlap showed up strong and there was a large number of the "high hat" club, but strangely enough for a democratic procession, they wore the Blaine and Logan white hats. In reply to the revelation that a huge practical joke had been perpetrated upon them, in equipping themselves they were led to believe by a dealer who was overstocked on Blaine hats that they were just the things to wear, and as they had not been buying plug hats since the Greeley campaign, they were easily persuaded to do so.

There were pictures of Blaine and Logan in the hats, but these dealers pulled out, but happened to miss a few. On the afternoon before starting the rumor began spreading that these were not Cleveland hats, and one or two described the pictures of the republican standard-bearers. It was too late to change, and there was nothing to do but to wear the hats as they were.

About one-third of the club concluded that they would not risk it and so left their tall hats at home, but the others wore them. On reaching here they found that they really were wearing Blaine hats, and their confusion and attempt to change was amusing.

It is rumored that the Blaine club at Dunlap did not feel that they could pay $2 apiece for white hats also put up the job, knowing that when the democrats discovered their mistake they would gladly get rid of them at any price. The Dunlap boys, notwithstanding their hats, were given a hearty welcome here, and had a jolly time.

Omaha did itself proud, and its music, uniforms, marching order and numbers, won much applause.

Dan Farrell, the gallant sheriff, commanded Mills county delegation, which was a strong one. Crescent City sent a big band wagon, which was a noticeable feature, and also sent about forty mounted torchmen, and Council Bluffs itself showed up weaker and poorer than any of the clubs. There were more "kids," less uniforms, and more howling and whooping than among any of the others. The Cleveland guards, however, redeemed this city. A fine body of young men, full fifty in number, with the Union Pacific banners. They showed off to good advantage, with their white shirts with blue fronts, black pants, and torches in their hats. They sang some lively campaign choruses as they marched along, and was the finest appearing body in the procession.

There were a large number of transparencies and emblems, besides the club banners. Among the lettering were: "No snoots to tonight." "Confidential, you'll smile when I tell you." "Blaine, Jay Gould's man Friday." "No injunction judges on his own oath." "Burn this letter." "Pusey voted to take back 40,000,000 acres of land." "The Hocking Valley." "Blaine prayed to Mulligan." "Tell the truth and get there." "The Plumed Fraud." "Give my love to Mrs. Fisher."

The decorations were not confined to the business part of the city, along the line of march, there were numerous residences finely decorated and illuminated. The most noticeable ones were those of Judge James G. D. Brown, and J. F. Hart. The last named place was made a blaze of light, and lanterns were strung across the street, and around the corner in profusion.

Along Main street and Broadway there was a bewildering of flags, emblems, lanterns, etc., and Main street from Mergen's corner to the Kiel hotel there were line upon line of these brightly lighted lanterns, and from there up to Broadway there numerous decorations. On Broadway it would be almost impossible to enumerate all the places. The most probably was the most attractive, there being several beautiful flags and some pleasing drapings. Hardin's windows were probably the most prettily illuminated. Perezoy & Moore's windows also looked very nicely. The Globe office had its front covered with flags and lanterns. Lacy's saloon had a transparency representing the republican barrel a empty, a very appropriate sign, as that it an excellent place to get a barrel of any sort emptied.

The main speakers stand was erected at the corner of Broadway and Bancroft street. It was put up by J. A. Murphy, the contractor, and was 20x40 feet. It was decorated very elaborately, and in front appeared a large eagle, carved out of wood, above which appeared in golden letters, "Mayor and citizens welcome, and below, "Cleveland and Hendricks" candidates for electors." There was also a large star of evergreens, a trophy brought from the Chicago democratic convention.

At this stand Hon. John G. Carlisle was the principal speaker. He was introduced by the mayor, and was received with the wildest enthusiasm. The burden of his speech was that the republican party had been long enough in power, and that it was best for the country to have more frequent elections. His other great theme was the tariff question. He denounced the protective policy, and aired at length his views of a tariff for revenue only. His speech was closely listened to, and so was encouraged by frequent applause.

Key. Albert De La Matyr, in the meantime was speaking from the balcony or the Pacific house to another crowd, all not able to get near enough to Carlisle to hear him. He spoke strongly in favor of the selection of Congressman Pusey on the ground that he would be more able to do for this district than during his first term, and would be more influential than the new member. He also devoted much time to the tariff question.

Hon. M. V. Gannon, the democratic candidate for attorney general of this state, gave a brief address to another crowd at the corner of Broadway and Bryan street. Mr. Lally, the democratic candidate for district attorney also made a short speech.

It was not so good a night, however, for oratory as for coal oil, hoarse throats, hurrah, boys, and a jolly time, and the streets were kept in an enthusiastic uproar till a late hour. Most of the delegations got off on speeches, but there were none of individuals who have their monograms in silver put on the buckles or embroidered in silk on the velvet.

Crimson skirts are very fashionable for school wear. On rainy days they do not present the drabbed appearance that white ones do, and, besides, they are dainty.

White Swiss aprons made in the Italian style, with a butterfly pocket on the right and narrow velvet ribbons about the sides and the top of the ruffles, are worn by young ladies at our fashionable schools. They fasten by the belt with wide satin ribbons of flowers such as gentian blossoms or poppies.

The girls in a fashionable uptown school are all wearing low-heeled lace shoes. They say they can take long walks in the park in these shoes and do not feel tired.

Plaid dresses with plaid-plaited skirts are popular. Most of them have bodices made of plaid, but others are worn with jersey waists.

Very long undressed kid gloves in tan shades are the most fashionable hand-coverings among school-girls. The high-crown hats with small brims and the round-roll brim turbans are favored for school wear. The bang is worn in fluffy little rings under them.

Silver daggers, swords, bows and set-sors are the designs of the lace-pieces in vogue. Linon cuffs are again in fashion. They are held by link studs.
