BLOOD FOR BLOOD. A Story of Corsican Love and Revenge. New York Telegram.

Along the path bordered with stones and briars, in the starlight, Stefano walked quickly. She was a little late. Fortunately Domenico had patience.

"No one! Domenico, then, was not there. Suddenly Stefano uttered a wild cry. Three paces from her, stretched out in the shade cast by the cluster of trees, lay a form—Domenico's perhaps.

"Stefano," he said at last, pausing, "we have walked a good way. Do you not want to lean on my arm?"

"What is the matter with you?" he asked, becoming suddenly uneasy. He tried to look in Stefano's face, but his eyes could not see anything but his features.

With a quick movement Stefano drew from her bosom a knife, whose naked blade of steel, short and straight, gleamed as she held it in his extended hand.

"It would be justice. You stand there before me, just as I would wish you to be, mad with love and writhing under my scorn. It is necessary that it should be so."

Eleven years ago Richard Penistan, a Chestnut street saloon keeper, set the town by the ears by drawing in the Royal Havana lottery the capital prize. When he wound up his business here and departed for his future home in Kentucky he had about $500,000 in cash.

Penistan, some years ago, did a heavy business in bottling liquors and selling direct to families. He amassed a considerable sum of money and was regarded as comfortably fixed.

On the other hand it is a matter for congratulation that the growth of some evil things may be promptly frustrated. A large proportion of the cases of the most wide-spread and fatal disease—consumption—have their inception in nasal catarrh.

It was in South street, and the shop-keeper was making a speech. There was a background of yellow oiled clothing and long sea-boots, pans and sheath-knives dangled from the roof.

How a Millionaire's Estate was Divided Among Claimants and Lawyers. San Francisco Chronicle.

The old saying that a man should put his house in order before he dies, has never received a stronger illustration than in the case of Francois Louis Alfred Pioche, the pioneer who assisted more actively than any other man in the early development and improvement of San Francisco.

Pioche drew this instrument two years before his death, with the assistance of W. H. Stow and S. H. Meredith. He made John B. Felton, Levi Parsons, Joseph H. L. Pioche and Roman Bayereux his executors.

Against it there was filed at once claim upon claim, aggregating millions, even L. W. Parsons, one of the legatees, coming forward with a demand for $25,000 for counsel fees.

THE SHOP-KEEPER'S SPEECH. A Background of Long Sea-Boots, Yellow Oiled Clothing and Sheath-Knives.

It was in South street, and the shop-keeper was making a speech. There was a background of yellow oiled clothing and long sea-boots, pans and sheath-knives dangled from the roof.

"Thank you, I brushed myself off a moment ago." "There's a lot of dust on the back of your coat, yet, sir."

"You see, some likes one kind of blacking and some another. I generally give satisfaction, sir; least I never see no gentleman complain."

STOPPED GIVING SAMPLES. One of the Effects of the Crazy-Quilt Mania. Chicago News.

"It is a fact that since this crazy-quilt craze has set in the former custom of the dry goods houses to let their lady customers have samples of stuff has been abolished."

DIVIDING THE REMNANT. The result was a compromise between all concerned. The entire estate was ceded to the creditors, these agreeing to pay $50,000 to each of the four residuary legatees.
