CHASED BY A PRAIRIE FIRE.

Terrible Experience of a Traveler on a Santa Fe Trail.

The Horseman, Overtaken, Stands at Bay against the Flames, but Loses his Steed and is Terribly Marked for Life.

From the Rocky Mountain News. A prairie fire. Who that has seen one can ever forget its magnificent terrors, real and imaginary! Far down on the horizon dense volumes of smoke with a brass glare hide the rays of the sun while yet the day is young. Noon approaches, but the curling, seething fire is the god of day and night. A mad, mad, mad monster is spreading some dreadful pall over the face of nature, making the middle seem almost as twilight, but with none of the heavenly planets to cheer the dismal scene. Nearer and nearer comes the dread apparition, and as the long hidden sun sinks in the west, a crimson glow lights the heavens from east to horizon; hot zephyrs with a charge her with neglecting the salvation of her own and her children's souls unless she forthwith subscribed for the book or exchanged for one of similar character which she found in many families. This sort of bulldozing probably had its effect in some instances, but in others that may be cited the lady canvasser found that her system failed to work. From two families she departed with wholesome admonitions, although she thought them almost with tears, and depicted in a terrible graphic manner the evil that should befall in case of a refusal to take "The Invitation to Christ." Perhaps by this time the lady has learned that a demeanor in keeping with the spirit of the work would be both more commendable as an example and in her more satisfactory pecuniary returns.

A COOL-HEADED ENGINEER. A correspondent, writing of a trip over the Rio Grande road, says: Leaving Salida we have to use two large mogul engines to take us over Marshall Pass, a grade twenty-six miles long and 217 feet to the mile, winding around twenty-six degrees curves. On one side you look down 3,000 feet, while by looking up on the other side of the train you can see rocks hanging over you more than a mile high, one of the grandest sights that a man ever saw, and worth the time and expense of any man. Forty-four miles is counted a day's work on this division for engineers, and their monthly earnings amount to from $100 to $150, and the stakes they run and able they are required is worth all the money they get. It is here that our old friend "Curley" Whitney had his runaway. There is no doubt, however, that he was never quite so happy as when he could hang his stage full of passengers over some deep precipice as he dashed up the Sierras, around some curve, and stretched his six horses out under the cracking of alkali at full gallop. And yet he was really reckless! I think not; for I think I see something of an explanation of it all in the swift motion of bicycles through the air. The man merely understood the properties of the air better than others, and knew well from long practice, that so long as he could keep his stage in a swift motion it would not upset, even if "all the wheels were over the precipice."

Never but once did he "upset," and that was on level ground and in his old age, as he slowly turned about in the yard to take in passengers. He handed in his whip after that, and would drive no more except on rare occasions. General Albert Pike, who rode with him in the last year of his life, and who knew him well, speaks of him as a man with a well-balanced head and great good sense. There was one little romance in his life, I am told, which ought to make a drama. A young orphan girl who admired the old hero, became his wife, and he settled down with her on a small farm. "Tally Ho," the first of the famous sages of the Sierras, and with his favorite horses gathered about him, hoping to end his days in peace. Only a partition divided his horses from his own little cabin home, and they often put their heads in and ate bread from his hands as he sat at table with his hostess, a long, lank Dutchman, and his pretty little wife. But trouble came to the happy home all too soon. The old hero of the road was poor, and still had to be away at his work. A handsome gambler, the professional friend of the confiding man, made all the trouble. The temptation to drink as a sort of necessity in his perilous journey through snow and storm, then the murderer of the gambler, leaving about the camp, the accusation of the woman, the assumption of the crime by Hank Monk to save the woman—that was the end, and all! Well, it is hard to tell here where fact leaves off and romance begins.

Curly was coming down this grade when his brakes got out of order and his train got the start of him. He was running at a terrific speed, and seeing no hope of avoiding a collision by dashing into the train ahead, he and his fireman, after doing all they could to check the speed of their train, jumped off and let it go. Ahead of them in the first section was one of those ever wide-awake, careful men, who always look to both ends of his train, and he was looking back when Curly and his train jumped off. Realizing his danger at once, he eased up on his brakes and got the speed of the runaway train. He then caught them and held both trains, until he brought them to a full stop, without a broken drawer even in either train. For this gallant conduct and presence of mind he was called before President Palmer, his heroic deed commended, and presented with $5,000 in cash, given a six months' leave of absence, and his transportation to Europe paid, together with all personal expense. The hero's name is Jake Moyer.

THE FEMALE BOOK AGENT. The female book agent is too often a fearful creature, getting at naught the cherished ideas of womanhood which command for it reverence and admiration in masculine thought. The average woman book agent it is safe to say, is an effort to every one who encounters her. If, after she has exhausted all the arts at her command of flattery, coaxing, appeal and subtle argument, the object of her attack preserves his sternness and his purse intact, he is a man of heroic mold indeed. But the agent knows her power, and she has more resources at her command than the most complete male master of strategy in politics or war, and she uses him with an artfulness that sooner or later brings down upon her the full force of the law. She is not successful with the lady of the house, because the good woman is much more impervious to her appeals and usually sees through her little game before she opens her subscription book. Now and then, however, she adopts a new line of assault, the very boldness and novelty of which gains success that could not be won by ordinary means. One of these persistent females not long ago made the rounds of a Troy neighborhood, canvassing for a book, which may be called "The Invitation to Christ"—a work of loftiest religious character. Naturally one would suppose that a lady canvasser for so pious a volume would have at least assumed a subdued and chastened mien. Not so this vigorous agent. Her method was to take the houses by storm, charge her with neglecting the salvation of her own and her children's souls unless she forthwith subscribed for the book or exchanged for one of similar character which she found in many families. This sort of bulldozing probably had its effect in some instances, but in others that may be cited the lady canvasser found that her system failed to work. From two families she departed with wholesome admonitions, although she thought them almost with tears, and depicted in a terrible graphic manner the evil that should befall in case of a refusal to take "The Invitation to Christ." Perhaps by this time the lady has learned that a demeanor in keeping with the spirit of the work would be both more commendable as an example and in her more satisfactory pecuniary returns.

"I has become so common to begin an article, in an elegant, interesting style. "Then run it into some advertisement that we avoid all such. "And simply call attention to the merits of Hop Bitters in as plain, honest terms as possible. "To induce people "To give them one trial, which so roves their value that they will never say anything else.

"The REMEDY so favorably noticed in all the papers, Religious and secular, is "Having a large sale, and is implanting all other medicines. "There is no use denying the virtues of the Hop plant, and the proprietors of Hop Bitters have shown great shrewdness and ability. "In compensating a medicine whose virtues are so palpable to every one's observation, "Did She Die? "Eleven years our daughter suffered on a bed of misery. "From a complication of kidney, liver, rheumatic trouble and Nervous debility. "Under the care of the best physicians "Who gave her disease various names, "But no relief, "And now she is restored to us in good health by as simple a remedy as Hop Bitters, that we had shunned for years before using it."—THE PARENTS.

"Father is Getting Well. "My daughter says, "How much better father is since he used Hop Bitters! "He is getting well after his long suffering from a disease declared incurable. "And we are so glad that he used your Bitters.—A LADY OF UTICA, N. Y.

"None genuine without a bunch of green Hops on the white label. Stomach all the vile, poisonous stuff with "Hop" or "Hops" in their name.

SOUTH OMAHA,

THAT IS THE NAME OF THE TOWN WHERE

Fine Healthy Homes.

FOR ALL ARE FOUND! Where They Can Enjoy Pure Air & Water! BEAUTIFUL SCENERY

And all of the good and pleasant things that go to make up a complete and happy existence. The town of South Omaha is situated south of the city of Omaha on the line of the U. P. Railway, and it is less than 2 1/2 miles from the Omaha post office to the north line of the town site. South Omaha is nearly 1 1/2 miles north and south by 2 1/2 east and west, and covers an area of nearly four square miles. The stock yards are at the extreme southern limit. Nearly 150 lots have been sold and the demand is on the increase. The yards are being rapidly pushed to completion. The $60,000 beef packing house is progressing finely. The $30,000 Water Works are finished and furnish an abundant supply of PURE SPRING WATER. The B. & M. and Belt Line Railways have a large force of men at work and will, in connection with the U. P. Railway, have a union depot near the park at the north end of the town. Suitable grounds will be furnished for Church and School purposes. Now is the time to buy lots in this growing city. They will never be cheaper than they are to-day.
