THE ONLY TRUE BROWN TONIC

LADIES' TONIC

THE FOOL'S ARGUMENT.

Mr. Robert Burdette, Unwillingly Known as "Bob," Discourses on Betting.

R. J. Burdette in Brooklyn Eagle. I did not bet any money on the recent election in Ohio.

I did not bet any money on the recent election in Ohio. It has been many years since I upheld my political principles by coining them for base drachmas.

A drachma, dear, is a spud, and a spud is a Lewis door, which door is an open sesame to the best society.

Years ago, when I was young and charming, rather a trifle more young than I was much more charming.

I had a box of cigars with me, and I had a political foe, but an esteemed personal friend, on the election of Mr. Hayes.

To give him a show for his white ally, I bet him a hat on the result in New York.

The returns promptly decided that I lost the hat and the United States congress and the high joint arbitration commission.

After gravely considering the question of personal smoking, I finally determined that I had won the box of cigars.

I never dreamed that such a simple bet would throw the republic into such a painful state of suspense, excitement and confusion.

I said then that never again would I thoughtlessly tamper with the peace and happiness of my country.

though all my political foes went bare-headed and I had to pick up stubs for my personal smoking all the days of our respective and respected lives.

I paid my hat bet. I went to the hat with my friend and had his head blocked for a special order.

His blocked head fairly awoke with joy when I told him I was going to have a hat made especially for him. He said:

"Robert, the sober solemn truth is, he said, 'Bob,' that doesn't look well in print, and I hate the name anyhow.

"Robert, if you win the cigars, which heaven forbid, I will go to Havana and make them myself."

I knew he would not. Far better than he did. I knew it.

The hat was made under the personal supervision of the hatter, by and with the advice and consent of myself.

It was a slick, shiny hat. It was about ten inches high and as asymmetrical as a store pipe.

It was the same size all the way up. The brim was about an inch and a quarter wide, flat and straight as a silver dollar.

It would have been the pride of a St. Patrick's day procession. It was the saint's father hat. Strong men shuddered when they saw it. I don't believe such a hat ever was made before or behind.

"Bob," he said, "I gathered about a second of my hat, and I was about to put it on, but I saw that it was not the hat on top of a dry goods box in open wagon and paraded down to my friend's store and I presented the hat with an elaborate and ornate address.

Men said it was the greatest effort of my life. I think it was. It not only fatigued me, but the people who heard it said it made them tired also.

"Bob," he said, "I gathered about a second of my hat, and I was about to put it on, but I saw that it was not the hat on top of a dry goods box in open wagon and paraded down to my friend's store and I presented the hat with an elaborate and ornate address.

Men said it was the greatest effort of my life. I think it was. It not only fatigued me, but the people who heard it said it made them tired also.

When the Court of Arbitration at last decided the other bet, the band and the crowd came out again, and my foe presented me with a box of cigars.

At the conclusion of the presentation speech he proposed that we smoke the weed of peace.

My thanks could not refuse. I faltered my thanks, I could not refuse and pushed twice or thrice.

That was nearly eight years ago, and yet sometimes I am aroused from the profoundest slumber in the dead of night by the lingering farewell of that cigar.

A policeman, who accidentally happened to be awake that afternoon, came along and arrested me on a charge of disorderly conduct, and I was taken to the police station and fined $10.

I went home, and a committee of my neighbors waited on me at a long range, and gave me twenty-four hours to leave the state.

I left the box of cigars on the office steps, and two tramps were found dead beside it, the next morning.

The board of health filed information against me for conspiracy, seized the cigars and threw them into the Mississippi river.

All the fish between Burlington and Keokuk died that week. I took down my shotgun, breathed into it, pointed it at a dog and he turned into a stone.

I blow fiercely down the barrel of the gun, intending to hunt for my foe, and the gun burst on the spot.

I don't know why I should recount the harrowing experiences of that week of horror!

I only mention these few leading facts, because Truth with a big T is so sadly seldom seen during this campaign, and I wish to introduce a little of it to heaven or twelve the canvas.

No, if I knew I could lose all the hats and win all the cigars in America on a bet, I would not do it.

Mr. Blaine will carry Georgia by ever so small a majority. I expect to wear a straw hat all winter, and I have given up the use of tobacco in any form.

I smoke only cigarettes.

Farming in Germany, American Agriculturist. Germany may well be classed among the great agricultural countries of the world.

More than half of forty three million population cultivate the soil. Agriculturally considered, Germany is a magnificent country.

The center and southern portions of the empire are a range of high table lands, interspersed with numerous ranges and groups of mountains, and abounding in the finest timber, growing in a soil rich with the decay of centuries.

The northern section is a vast sandy plain, stretching from the Russian frontier on the east to Holland on the west.

A TALE OF THE WAR.

A Missouri Guerrilla Who Married the Wife of a Man He Had Murdered.

Quite recently a gentleman living in Pittsburg received a letter from his son, who resides in the state of Missouri, notifying him of the death of a lady connected with the family named Mrs. Wilson.

His death recalls one of the war which read more like a romance than the narration of a sober fact.

The recipient of the letter to a Pittsburg Leader reporter. "Some time about the period of the war a young Missourian, who had been married but a few months, feeling that the demands of his country were stronger than those of home, bade farewell to his lovely wife and enlisted in the army of the north.

After his enlistment a letter announced the arrival of a young stranger in the family circle, and the soldier applied for permission to go home on a furlough to see his offspring.

The permission was granted a month or two later, and, filled with joyful anticipation of the glad meeting that would hail his return, he started from Virginia for his home.

Missouri at this time was overrun with a savage set of men who pursued a regular guerrilla warfare and were called bushwhackers.

From the bushes that hedged the roadsides they sent their murderous bullets to the hearts of unsuspecting travelers who passed their place of concealment, and many are the tales of how they rode up at night, and firing through the windows of humble dwellings, killed the innocent men who were sitting at the fireside surrounded by their little ones.

One soldier had arrived within three miles of his home, one dark night, when he was seized by one of these bands of guerrillas as he was riding along the lonely road and by them strung up to a tree, as they were rebels and hated a union man as Lucifer hates St. Michael.

His body was cut down next day by his friends and interred in the village churchyard.

As the years rolled by time so rolled the soldier's mind, so that when her name was sought by a wealthy neighbor whose name was Wilson she consented to the marriage.

Time sped along on the rapid wing. The war has been ended, and only remnants of veterans and the stories of battle-scars men kept the scenes of the conflict vividly in the mind.

Ever since the rebellion it has been the custom of a body of men to meet at a certain place in the town to meet at stated periods in various sections of the state.

Wilson was a member of this organization, and in the course of events his house was selected as the place for their reunion.

On the evening when they met there, Wilson and several of the men were chatting together in one room, recalling the exciting scenes that had been witnessed in person during the war.

One of the men, who was an old soldier, was talking of the war, and was saying that he had never seen a man so brave as a young fellow who had been with him during the war.

"Wilson, were you one of the men who helped to hang that man?" he asked.

CHINESE CUNNING.

The Way in Which Chinese Smuggle Themselves into the Country.

San Francisco Bulletin. The steamer Arabic brings 280 Chinese passengers from Hong Kong.

Of 121 in all, 77 are for Honolulu, and 44 for Panama.

Twenty-six have not the certificates required by law.

Sixteen have Chinese consular certificates. Ten have no certificates of any description.

They were accepted as passengers on the guarantee that their return passage money would be paid if they were not landed.
