There is good deal of truth in this, for at the very head as an agricultural county. the republican vote in New York is largely in the country, and the farmers will not ride any great distance through rain and mud for the purpose of voting. ## The Danger of Debt, Kansas City Journal.

The west has, in its march of progress, as marvelous as it has been, had to contend against debt. All classes of indus try have been clogged by the disposition borrow more than has been prudent, and especially has this been true of th farmers. They have been too much inclined to buy more than they should on time, and discount their growing crops. The effect has been, and it is felt just now when farm products are low that though the money received for them will purchase as much, and perhaps more, of every kind of supplies needed in the house or on the farm, as the same amount of crops a few years ago sold at higher rates, yet the farmer with debts to pay is not relieved of his hardships, for his debta have not diminished, but have increased with ac cumulated interest.

To avoid the effect of hard times. farmer must keep out of debt. The great misfortune of the average farmer to-day omes from long standing debts, with ac cumulated interest, and the present low prices for farm products that renders iquidation a slow process at best, if it do not prove ruinous in the end. It may be contended that we are med dling in what does not concern us in speaking of the danger of debt to the farmer, and especially by those in debt. It may be regarded as unkind to invite attention to the prevalence of debt among farmers, but we do refer to it to enjoin caution. We would say to all farmers to be cautious about contracting debts, and when once relieved of debt to be extremely cautious about entering into ondage again.

We know there are many inducement for the farmer to get into debt. Merchants invite him to extend his credit, for they know while he may be slow in paying, he is generally very sure. Loan agents and others are willing to advance him money, for they know, as Gov. Grover Cleveland said to the farmers at Elmira, N. Y., that the soil does not shift from place to place, and the farm is sure to remain where it can be realized on if the money loaned is not forthcoming at the proper time. All these tempta tions and invitations to accept credit should be avoided as much as possible by the farmers.

We know that the farmers will find i hard to resit, and that the manner of farming in this country makes it almost necessary to borrow while the crops are growing, to furnish the needs of the arm and fireside. But this excuse for going in debt, in a great measure, can be overcome; overcome by farming differently, and by raising a diversity of products.

The thrifty and industrious farmer should always have something to sail when he is in need of money. Our farmers take to one grop, corn or wheat, too much. The sale of these staple crops should be supple mented by sales of the products of poultry yard, the dairy, from the stable n the way of horses, from the orchard, the hog-pen, and from other sources of supply that can be multiplied by industry and common business sense on a farm. Such a course would relieve many a
