SINOR Wiggins has joined the Salvation army he predicts cyclones of righteous wrath and extremely hot weather for sinners.

THIS son of Rev. Dr. Burchard objects to a stage donkey in a New York theater being called "Burchard." Perhaps the donkey objects also.

AMONG the persons mentioned for a place in Cleveland's cabinet is Jonas, but perhaps the democratic whale will swallow this Jonas, who has been thrown overboard by his own constituency in Louisiana.

THE cruel treatment of his daughter by Lord Chief Justice Coleridge, of England has lost that eminent man all his friends in America. Should he ever again visit the United States he would find that it would be a continually cold day for him.

WHILE the friends of Grover Cleveland deny in a semi-authoritative way the rumors of his engagement to first this belle and then to that one, we have heard no denials from the ladies in question. It is said that silence gives consent, and the conclusion is that like Backus they are willing.

BEN BUTLER always has at least one eye to business. He has already started in to make up the money lost in traveling over the country in a palace car in the vain pursuit of the presidency. Since the election he has leased to the senate for committee-rooms one of his granite houses on Capitol Hill, Washington, at $10,000 per annum.

BEFORE the election P. T. Barnum offered to sell his property for two-thirds its value in the event of Cleveland's success. He still holds his property, however, but his $10,000 giraffe has laid down and died, probably with grief over the result of the election, which, according to Barnum's figures, depreciated his value one-third, or $3,333.

THE example set by the New York authorities in putting a stop to glove-fights is already having a good effect in other cities. In St. Paul the chief of police on Thanksgiving day stopped a hard-glove fight in a gymnasium. It is to be hoped that this kind of evasion of the law will be eventually suppressed in every city in the country, as most of these exhibitions are nothing but prize-fights, and certainly have a demoralizing influence.

GROVER CLEVELAND will have hard work to find places in his cabinet for all the eminent statesmen that have been suggested to him. So far about twenty-one secretaries of state, thirty secretaries of the treasury, fifty secretaries of the interior, forty secretaries of war, thirty secretaries of the navy, seventy-five postmaster-generals and thirty-seven attorneys-general have been named by his friends, and the returns are not all in yet.

A COUNTERFEITER who recently escaped from jail at Madison, Wisconsin, has forwarded from the lumber regions to the federal authorities a bond for his appearance whenever wanted, with the statement that he had to go home to get bail. This may be rather an irregular way of transacting such business and may be all right in the end, but we should not be surprised if the bond proves to be a counterfeit. In that event it will be a genuine joke on the authorities.

THE retirement of Justice Bradley, of the supreme court of the United States, depends entirely upon his own free will. He is an ardent partisan, and would rather hold on to his office until death rather than to resign his position to a democrat. The probability is that unless he resigns this winter the chance of a republican succeeding him will be very slim. It is likely, therefore, that he will ask to be retired before President Arthur's term expires, so that a republican can be appointed. In this event it is estimated that the president will name Judge Gresham for the place.

THERE are two men in Washington who evidently don't care whether school keeps or not. One of them is Mr. Marr, chief clerk of the postmaster-general, who very often acts as chief of the department in the absence of the head, and is really the great factotum. He has been in the harness as a federal officer going on fifty-one years without intermission, through all the changes from whigs to democrats and from democrats to republicans. The other veteran office-holder is William Hunter, second assistant secretary of state, who entered the public service forty years ago under General Jackson, and has remained continuously in office ever since, under Calhoun, Webster, Cass, Seward, Fish, Evarts, Blaine and Frelinghuysen.

WAR ON THE MUGWUMPS.

New Haven, Conn., November 26.—The republican party primaries were held to night. Independents claiming still to be republicans but admitting they voted for Cleveland were denied the privilege of participating in any way whatsoever in the caucus. The vote was unanimous for their expulsion.—Associated Press Dispatch.

Whom the gods wish to destroy they first make mad. Nothing but rancorous folly and madness could possibly inspire republicans in refusing to allow the so-called mug-wumps to resume party allegiance if so disposed. How is it possible for the republican party ever to win another battle against democracy entrenched within the fortress of federal patronage if it cannot win back those members of the party that left it during the recent campaign? It was a very idiotic thing in the first place to denounce as mug-wumps the independent republicans who refused to support Blaine, and it is nothing but malignant stupidity to continue a warfare that must forever keep the party in the minority. The doctrine of the sovereignty of the individual and his right to cast his ballot according to the dictates of his own conscience was established at Chicago in 1880, when Garfield made that famous speech which gave him the nomination of the presidency. Garfield maintained that the delegate to a national convention was not bound to support its nominees if his own conscience did not approve of the choice of the majority. That view was sustained by the national convention when it refused to adopt the resolution expelling the delegates who declined to support any man that would be nominated by the convention. While we do not propose to defend the course of the independent members who bolted the Blaine movement, every rational republican should have accorded to him the moral right to do with his vote as he thinks best, and for exercising that right in a conscientious manner he does not deserve to be stigmatized as a mugwump. The mug-wumps were republicans who were not in the market with their votes, and were known among the most respectable members of the party. A large majority of them had been republicans from the day the party was organized, and for this reason they certainly were entitled to fair and honorable treatment at least from that class of republicans who have come into the party for the sake of the spoils, and never would have been republicans except to further their own ambitions. The mugwumps of Connecticut are reported to be men of the highest character, and who care nothing for patronage or the emoluments of office. Connecticut has been a close state for years, and if the mugwumps are to be kept out of the party, the party will stay in the minority. In 1872 when the republicans controlled both houses of congress by a three-fourths majority, the liberal republicans who revolted against General Grant's methods of administration were treated after the de-facto of Greeley with great magnanimity. It will be admitted that it would have been much more dangerous to the country and more disastrous to the party to have been overthrown twelve years ago, when Charles Sumner, Lyman Trumbull, Wendell Phillips, Horace Greeley, and hosts of other original republicans deserted the party. The republican leaders at that time, including General Grant, did not ask for their expulsion, although they were as active and conspicuous then as such men as George Williams Curtis, Carl Schurz and other leading independent republicans are now. The republican leaders, however, did "excommunicate," as it were, the New York Tribune, the Chicago Tribune, and the Cincinnati Commercial, which paper deserted the party at a time when its work was incomplete, and they were willing to make common cause with the confederates. These very papers are now making Rome howl with their curses and abuses of the mug-wumps. So far as THE BEE is concerned, we supported Grant in 1872 and Blaine in 1884. We did not join the revolt of twelve years ago, nor did we pursue the liberal republicans then, and we do not approve the way upon the mug-wumps now. If the republicans are to ever recover their lost prestige as a national party, they must open their doors wide and invite every man who has been a republican to come back and help to reorganize it and restore it to its original purity and high moral standard which were maintained under the rule of Abraham Lincoln.

THE "NEGROIZED" SOUTH.

Forty-two electors were given to the negroized south by the republican party that might hold power forever. How many of them will be counted for Mr. Blaine in 1884?—Omaha Herald.

Why was it necessary for the Herald to indulge in such sneers? The point that it makes betrays the weakest spot and opens up one of the darkest pages in the history of the democratic party. Why was it that Blaine did not secure any of the electors of the "negroized south"? It was because the confederate democracy made it impossible for republicans to vote down there with any degree of safety. The democrats have suppressed public sentiment in this section by a system of terrorizing, beginning with the Kuklux, and followed by the white league. Of course it was not necessary after the Ohisholm and Mathews murders in Mississippi, and the Hamburg massacre in South Carolina, to continue the use of the shotgun and revolver, or to have armed and masked men tramp through the country to frighten the negro. The object was achieved. The majority in some of the southern states for prudential reasons did not vote. How was it in Mississippi, Louisiana and South Carolina? In those states there are more negroes than whites, and it was only fair to say that they would have voted and carried those states for Blaine with the assistance of white republicans, had they not been influenced by fear to stay away from the polls. The republican party is undoubtedly to blame for this state of facts. It should have enforced the right of every man to cast his vote and have it honestly counted. It failed to do this, and hence the result in the "negroized" south. Until it is possible for any American citizen, white or black, to vote with safety in any state of the union for whom he pleases and belong to whatever party he may see fit, the republican party will have an incentive to stand together and fight the battle over again. So long as we do not have a free ballot and a fair count in every part of the country, our republican form is a sham and a farce.

The interest Prince Bismarck takes in the Congo conference, now in session in Berlin, is but a part of the larger interest Germany feels in the matter of securing a foothold in South Africa, as a step toward colonial extension of the empire. For years past the country has felt the pressure of poverty, and attributes it to over-population, in spite of the large emigration of her people to America. The truth is that German poverty may be traced to the character of this emigration, and to the causes which led to it. For years past the country gets no benefit in an industrial sense, but finds them a burden. It has to feed and clothe them in their barracks, through every session to put up schemes by which they can raid the treasury. Why was it that the legislative journals were not printed until a year after the last legislature had concluded its work? Why was it that they were so imperfectly prepared that even to-day we can not find out many important things that they ought to have contained, and yet we are constantly told by certain of his admiring friends what an excellent clerk this man Slaughter has made. It may be a good thing for the State Journal, that lives and thrives on state printing, to have the business of the house in the hands of one of its pet strikers, but it is not in the interest of tax payers to give Brad. Slaughter a perpetual lease on the office of chief clerk. It is to be hoped that the coming legislature will give him a much needed rest.

OTHER LANDS THAN OURS.

The reluctance of Mr. Gladstone to bring on a collision between the two houses of parliament has led to negotiations between the conservatives and liberals, which are as yet not concluded. According to the London Standard, which was the first paper to publish a rough draft of the government redistribution bill some weeks ago, it is still possible that the proposed compromise will fall through. Lord Salisbury has hitherto held high and confident language. He has insisted on the dangers of passing the franchise bill unaccompanied by that reallocation of seats which would prevent it from working in justice. He has led the peers into a position from which neither they nor he can retreat without some discredit. He is courageous, and does not fear the extinction of the house, for it would restore him to the house of commons. But he is one of those who, though they walk boldly to the brink, hesitate before they jump off. The boldest general must study the temper of his soldiers: if he finds them cowed, he may do well to accept any fair conditions of retreat. There is unquestionably some depression, some apprehension, among the tory peers. Many hold that it will lead to an open defection if Lord Salisbury persists. This seems unlikely. But it may induce him to pause and permit the passage of the franchise bill as the price for having a milder scheme of redistribution than the liberal majority would otherwise compel. It remains to be seen how many peers will risk a collision with the commons rather than accept this scheme of redistribution.

THE "NEGROIZED" SOUTH.

This is rather an unique year for the upper houses of the various parliaments in whose proceedings the world has so far become partially interested. The woes of the house of lords are the most familiar of all these aristocratic sorrows, and need not be dwelt upon. The peers even now busy eating their lead. The French senate, having, through the conservative temperament of Premier Ferry, preserved its existence in the face of republican feeling in France, is bound to part entirely with the principle of life membership, and becomes more nearly one part a duplicate legislature than can be found outside of a Pennsylvania or a Massachusetts city. The result, it is declared, will make the senate a council of nobilities, not a body of men all or any of whom France would delight to honor. The pretenders are still intelligible as well as eloquent in their demands for a constitutional habit in St. Skye, as the Highlands, the tribal system of land tenure prevailed till within the memory of men still living. The chiefain had nothing more than certain rights of maintenance or "boon-right" among his clansmen. In the process of Anglification the High-landers in 1748, but still far from complete, the chieftainships were converted into English baronies, and the chiefs were vested with the absolute ownership of the land as fast as they chose to accept this new status. This of itself drove many highlanders out of the country, and many others who saw their fathers had been freeholders. The oppressive estates of landlord rights created by English law in defiance of justice has grown worse with each generation. First the small farmers were evicted in considerable numbers to make room for large farms for the English model. Then large and small were swept away to find room for sheep. Then sheep and men must both give place to deer forests. As a consequence very much of the country has been stripped of its people. But now the island is getting what the Highlands endured and the people have risen in a kind of revolt. Their temper of resistance is none the less formidable because they are devout and even somber Calvinists, who open and close their meetings with prayer and vote a Presbyterian minister into the chair if one is to be had. To suppress the movement by mere brute force will be impossible, for it has enlisted too much sympathy throughout Scotland and even in England for this sort of treatment.

The revolutionary party of Russia has been quiet for the entire year, giving birth to the hope that the chief difficulties were at an end. Having destroyed the means of publication at the command of the revolutionary committee and imprisoned a number of leading nihilists, the government began, at last, to feel a certain sense of security. It appears, however, that the storm of revolution was only temporarily suspended instead of being brought to an end. The past year has only been the calm preceding the tempest, for we find that the machinery of nihilism is again in full blast.

The trade of the ports of the Adriatic Sea has already been benefited by the new Arlberg tunnel through the Rhetian Alps. Austria profits by the shortness of the railway route to Switzerland and South Bavaria, which brings the traffic of two continents through the sea which no longer pours its wealth into the lap of Venice, but enriches its northern rival. Egyptian cottons pass by this route to Verbal and Eastern Switzerland, and American cottons, it is expected, will soon come this way. The neighboring ports of Finne will also share in the advantages which are insured to Trieste by its favorable situation.

A ROBBER HOPED.

Baltimore, November 28.—Report reached here that Geo. Brister, colored, was lynched Wednesday night at Newbridge, this state. He was charged with robbery and while the crowd was conducting him to jail a crowd of whites, took Brister and hung him. He had been warned previously to leave the country.
