PLEASING THE PUBLIC.

John B. Gough Tells The Bee Some

Few of His Personal Experiences

Those who were so entertained by the ecture of John B. Gough would have found him fully as entertaining, or more so, in private conversation had they the opportunity to meet him socially, His fund of anecdotes seems inexhaustible. THE BEE man had the privilege of meeting him in company with Hon. D. C. Bloomer, at the Ogden house. Some remarks caused the conversation to drift upon personal incidents in regard to Mr. Gough's experience with various audiences. Naturally in forty-two years of public life, and in appearing before audiences in all parts of this and the old country, he has had not a few amusing incidents. Some of these he narrated in his inimitable manner. Among these was one of an Englishman who introducing him to the audience compared him to "Samson of old who had slain his thousand tens of thousands with the jaw bone of an ass." Another time a Scotchman in Introducing Mr. Gough, expressed the hope "that he would prove a deal better as he looked." At one place, a temporary platform had been arranged in a church, but so high that Mr. Gough had to look down from a dizzy height upon the audience. He objected to such a platform, but it was too late to remedy It, and the preacher who opened the meeting with prayer, devoutly told the good Lord, "We are sorry, O Lord, that the arrangements are not pleasing to the speaker, and we pray thee that the difficulties may not prove as great as are expected, but that he may be able to give as good a lecture here, as he is reported in the newspapers as having given in other places. All such hits of his personal experience lose the greater share of their force by repetition, but when told by Mr. Gough he treated the Oxford students. It was capital. You know the Oxford students with tht Catholic fair in Masonic hall; pay very little respect to any one who is Patrick O'Donnell, the lover of Ellen man's motto. Is it fair play for several hundred of you to be against one, and a little one too?' They made some further racket, but the idea seem to strike them, and as they quieted a little I got a chance to tell them to send up their champion and let him talk ten minutes and then I would talk ten minutes, and the rest should be the jury. That was fair play.

After a little one fallow as id. Well Chair. After a little one fellow said: 'Well, Christ turned water into wine.' I replied, 'I haven't anything to say against that kind of drinks. You may drink all the wine you can get made out of nothing but water.' There was a good-natured laugh, five ordinary men, and yet, poor fellow, he wants a little wine for his stomach's sake.' There was great laughter, and I had won and was given a hearing.

"But, Stauley, he did a capital thing.
He appeared, and on the platform with him was a regular Zulu, who had been with him several months. They commenced with Stanley as with me, and it ort of dazed him at first, but after a little he commenced hurrahing and cheering himself. This struck the Oxford students as queer, and they quieted down to see what it meant.
Stanley said, 'gentlemen, please do ings with prayer.
not stop. John, here, has not seen such The new packir a sight since he left his home in Zulu land, eight months ago, and it delights him. This next comparison of the cultured but mischievous fellows to the wild Zulus, had the desired effect, and Stanley was given an attentive hearing." Speaking of interruptions, while speak ing, Mr. Gough tells of one fellow whe | 000 for a reading room at Denison. kert singing and from the gallery, "That isn't so," and occasionally making the contradictions more offensive by an oath. At every interruption of this kind some pretty well dressed fellows, who looked ike gentlemen, and who were just under the gallery, would laugh, and appear de-lighted. Some in the audience called "Put him out," but Mr. Gough said he did not want him put out. He pitied him. It was evident that those other fellows had got a few drinks into him and were delighted that he was making such a fool of himself. He then told the story of the man who was a great joker, but had only one joke, and being a great stammerer had difficulty in getting off even this. Everybody knew the joke, so when he commenced in his stammering way to tell it to a stranger, one of the stammerer's townsmen standing by, and sympathizing with his stuttering attempt, said to the stranger, "He wants to ask you if you know why Ba-laam's ass spoke." The stranger said he thought it was because the man was a tammerer and got his ass to speak for tal $100,000. im. The laugh that was raised made the fellow in the gallery so angry that he blubbered out, "That's me," and the crowd renewing the laughter, the fellow picked up his hat, rushed out and quiet

'But you disturb the baby.' replied the woman. Now, that poor fel-low is not disturbing me. but I'm disturbing him. Let him stay." There was no more interrupting, and by the next day that fellow had the nickname "the baby" stick so closely to him by his

BOLD ROBERY

An Atlantic Man Gets His Pockets Cleaned Out at The Trans-

Saturday night a man named Graves, hailing from Atlantic, and on his way to Cheyenne was the victim of a bold robbery at the transfer Saturday night. He was in the outhouse at the time and several fellows coming in, pushed against him rudely, and as he protested, and they passed on, he found that his pocket had been cut, and about $100 taken from it. The fellows made good their escape.
