A LOST LOVER.

A fine Tale, Rather Romantic, of Lost Swain.

Pique and Coquetry Combine to Break the Betrothat

Bond.

A curious story has recently found consummation, to which there belong all the teresting moreover, from the fact that a moral is pointed in a manner which is practical and plain.

Some years ago there came to this country from Sweden, a young couple, who had determined to seek their fortunes in the grand and boundless territory of America. Both were young and had, for years before leaving Sweden been engaged to each other. It was, agreed that as soon as the young lover had gained an assured competency, the girl was to become his wife. With this understanding the two separated, the girl coming to Omaha, while the young man started for New Mexico, determined to amass by the quickest possible honorable means a fortune.

Some years passed and the hopeful swain had worked and prospered. With prospects assured, he came to Omaha a few weeks ago, determined to ask in marriage the hand of the girl for whom Sunday night Dr. W. H. Coffman and Mr. R. C. Patterson, the well known real estate man, were indulging in a little spin with the "merry sleigh," each going, of course in an opposite direction. An unlucky collision occurred, by which the doctor was thrown violently from his sleigh. Fortunately, however, he was not seriously injured.

Yesterday Dr. Coffman was driving down Sixteenth street when his horse became frightened and overturned the buggy. A gentleman who was riding with the doctor, was the man who was riding with the doctor, was the man who was riding with the doctor, was the man who was riding with the doctor, was the man who was riding with the doctor, was the man who was riding with the doctor, was the man who was riding with the doctor, was the man who was riding with the doctor, was the man who was riding with the doctor, was the man who was riding with the doctor, was the man who was riding with the doctor, was the more man who was riding with the doctor, was the more man who was riding with the doctor, was the more man who was riding with the doctor, was the more man who was riding with the doctor, was the more man who was riding with the doctor, was the more man who was riding with the doctor, was the more man who was riding with the doctor, was the more man who was riding with the doctor, was the more man who was riding with the doctor, was the more man who was riding with the doctor, was the more man who was riding with the doctor, was the more man who was riding with the doctor, was the more man who was riding with the doctor, was the more man who was riding with the doctor, was the more man who was riding with the doctor was threat in question the tracts in question deficials of the B. & M. railroad regulate their trains so that there would be an open way between the cars at these points and present their trains so that there would be an open way between the cars at these points and present the mand of the givent their trains so that there would be an open way between the cars at these points Mrs. Annie M. Nevertheless she determined to watch develpements.

About ten days ago she received a letter from him, evidently written while in great agony. The message stated that he had been attacked by a number of cowboy desperadoes, overpowered and fatally shot. He was lying at the point of death, and wanted to warn her never to "deceive another man as she had deceived him." Of course the girl tool the matter greatly to heart, grieving intensely over the thoughtless, though unintentional wrong she had committed.

Shortly after a paper was received de-tailing the tragedy, stating that the young man was fatally wounded and could not possibly recover. It is needless to say that this further intelligence nearly drove the girl crazy
