Borton Journal. An old lady in Georgia saya Lulu Hurst recalls to her mind a girl whom she knew when young and whose powers were semewhat like Lulu's, but stronger. The strange power came to this ancient Lulu in fits, and when they came on she would leap so high as to make her head touch the cailing of an ordinary room When she became quiet and seated the chairs, tables and such things in the room would begin to dance around until they would get up against the chair in which the girl was seated. She had no control over the power and it only exerted itself at times. Her friends thought her bewitched and were afraid of her. Whatever the agency may have been the girl dwindled from a robust, healthy person, to a wreck, when she died.

MARY ANDERSON'S LOVE.

Miss Mary Anderson, the celebrated

American socress, after being engaged (or paper) to the Duke of Posiland, Cancr. Farrar, James Gordon Bennett, Lord Garmoyle, the Archbishop of Canterbury and Mr. menry E. Abbay, is now said to have actually centred her affection upon a young sculptor of London named Rene. He, it seems, was some time ago com-missioned by Mr. Abbey to make a lifesize, full-length statue of the charming actress, to be placed in the Royal Academy and subsequently in the lobby of the Lyceum theatre. Mr. Abbey was led to choose him from an ideal bust which he made of Miss Ellen Terry, and which gave such a suave and beautiful contour to the head of that lady that Mr. Abbey dubbed him the woman's sculptor par excellence. Miss Anderson then made works of his which she was shown. Then Mr. Abbey determined to make the actress a present of the statue of herself on the sole condition that she should consent to sit for it. The position chosen was to represent Miss Anderson in the costume of Galatea as she first awakes to

This was chosen as the most appro priate and striking of all her impersonations and the most likely to be made an effective statue.

The work was begun about six months ago, and Miss Anderson took a great in terest in it from the very start. On several occasions she dismissed rehearsa's to attend her seence as a model, and very scon the work seemed to absorb her whole attention. She grow enthusiastic over it and gradually came to prolong the sittings from one hour to two, three and The statue was the constant subject of her conversation, and from that it very often passed to the young sculptor, of whom she spoke with great fervency and admiration. This was remarked by the watchful eye of Dr. Hamilton Griffin, the step-father of the actress, who immediately requested o accompany Miss Andersen on her daily excursions to the studio of Mr. Rene. But this apparent surveillance soon worried Miss Anderson, who notified the doctor that his esplonage was annoying and requested him to remain away and attend to his business affairs.

Then Mrs. Griffin, the mother of Miss Anderson, took a hand in and appeared suddenly to take the most lively interest in the matter of the statue. But the old lady's criticism and remarks about the work were naturally rather ludicrous and brought some confusion to Miss Anderson's family pride. At any rate she made this the ground of requesting her mother to absent herself more frequently from the sittings. Though the work dragged on in duration Miss Anderson did not appear to weary of. She took the most lively interest in the smallest details, and even spent some of her time in taking lessons in modeling from the handsome Mr. Rene.
