DEMOCRATIC SIMPLICITY.

The President Makes a Tour of all the Departments.

A Sarcastic Sketch by Eugene Field, in the Chicago News.

Having eaten a hearty breakfast of corned beef and johnny cake, President Cleveland put on his hat and overcoat and strode toward the front door of the white house.

"I am going for a short walk," replied the president. "I will be back by 7:30."

"No, sir," answered the beautiful being in the call, as she hurried along with the mail sack.

"I have had the gas meter taken out of the building," said the secretary, "and have returned to the good old democratic simplicity of candles."

"That is right," said the president and as he walked away he felicitated himself and his country upon having secured the co-operation of such a honest, fearless patriot as the Albany journal.

"Yes, I am very busy," said Mr. Bayard, "and I have been hard at work since 3 o'clock this morning."

"Can you tell me where to find the secretary of the navy?" sternly demanded the president, who was evidently pained to see one of the lad's years idling in this way.

"Simply because I have chills and fever," says the shaker. But why have chills and fever? Because malaria got ahead of me.

Trains Talk.

A man with gray hair, closely cropped, and a clean-shaven chin sat upon the driver's seat of a locomotive standing in the yard.

"Suppose you think a good deal of your machine, don't you?" remarked an admiring bystander.

"I have eight minutes before the gong sounds," he continued, "and in those eight minutes I will tell you what has been an eternity to me."

"When the three months was nearly up I applied for leave of absence, and one night was on the next run to the last before I should go to my wedding."

"I will not interrupt them," thought the president, so he retired noiselessly and skipped over to the interior department.

"I have just left a bundle of letters with Lamont for you," said Vilas.

"How do you happen to be here instead of at your post of duty?" inquired the president, gloomily.

"Why, when I got out to the office at 4 o'clock this morning," explained Vilas, "I found one of our men sick, so I concluded to carry his route for him myself to-day."

"I have had the gas meter taken out of the building," said the secretary, "and have returned to the good old democratic simplicity of candles."

OMAHA! A GROWING CITY

The remarkable growth of Omaha during the last few years is a matter of great astonishment to those who pay an occasional visit to this growing city.

Since the Wall Street panic May, there has been less demand from speculators, but a fair demand from investors seeking homes.

The next few years promise greater developments in Omaha than the past five years, which have been as good as we could reasonably desire.

We have for sale the finest residence property in the north and western parts of the city.

North we have fine lots at reasonable prices on Sherman avenue, 17th, 18th, 19th and 20th streets.

We also have the agency for the Syndicate and Stock Yards property in the south part of the city.

We also have some fine business lots and some elegant inside residences for sale.
