COUNCIL BLUFFS. ADDITIONAL LOCAL. OVER THE HILLS. The Sights at the County Poor House Few Uhances for Improvement. There has been various talk from time to time about the county farm, and the management of the poor house. In order to see for himself how matters appeared there, the BEE man on Saturday took a trip out to the farm, and got such facts as a hurrled inspection of the place would secure. The first thing to attract the attention of the visitor was the cleanliness of the grounds, the yard being raked off and no litter being in sight. The exterior of the house had evidently received care, and there appearing nothing on the outside with which to find fault, the unofficial inspector started for the house itself, quite confident and half hoping that on the inside at least something would be revealed which would be in keeping with some of the talk heard. On the porch of the house, sunning themselves, were sitting the old man and his aged wife, the old man blind, and the old woman feeble,-both homeless and penniless. It was a rad picture to one imagining what a change had doubtless come to them since they were in the'r prime. Sadder yet did it seem when the fact was learned that the old. blind man had two brothers, both ilving in the western part of this state, and both well off, and having an abundance to share with their unfortunate brother. The old man gave his name as Losh, and on talking with him the BEE man learned the gang, numbering sixteen in all. The that he was as happy as one could be in his condition. He said he was treated very kindly and had no reason to com-starting fires to keep warm very kindly and had no reason to com-plain of the management. His wife cor-roborated this statement, and the aged of this waste that the other day a freight couple were left to continue their train had to come back to the yards and get the boxes packed sgain. The tramps

The BEE man was agreeably surprised to find that calmness prevailed to an extent not common in such places. The floors were scrabbed until they fairly shone, and everything about the place indicated care, even if luxury was lacking. A visit was made to the sleeping rooms, and these were also found to be clean and as comfortable as they could be in such a building. The house is a plain frame building, and the partitions are of the thinnest, cheapest sort, and in the severe, cold weather, it must be almost impossible to keep the rooms warm. The building is a shell, and in case of a fire starting, it would take but a few minutes to reduce it to ashes. Inquiry revealed the fact that there was no sort of fire protection. It seemed that the least the county could do would be to put in a force pump, there being a good well from which to wood, the mother of Mrs. Bechtele, draw a supply. It seems that her sad experience has profited her little.

One pitiable case is that of a young woman, whose husband was killed on the raliway at Kearney. She is anxiously awaiting for some tiding from her brother, named Mathany, whose address she does not know. The First of the Falles. A boy, the only one among the inmates,

The boy's history was to the effect that his mother was dead, and his father married again, and they were making their home at Woodbine, when making their home at Woodbine, when this second mother run away. Soon after this his father, who was a railroad man, got a job on a construction train running out of here, and coming here his father put him into St. Joseph's hospital in Omahs to get his head treated. He stayed in the hospital five months during which his father visited him once only, and he has not seen or heard of him sinte. A short time ago the priest, learning that the boy belonged here rather than there, brought him over, and he was taken to the poor farm. It seems that if the boy could be given half a chance in the world, he could make a useful citizen. He seems contented, useful citizen He seems contented, however, and little realizes the poor start he is getting in life's race.

The worst lack to be seen in the care of these dependents is clothing. The boy referred to is needing clothes to make him comfortable, and one little babs that is out there is in a pitiable and filthy condition, on account of a lack of necessary changes.
