

OFF FOR OREGON.

A Lively Party of Omaha Merchants Gaze West.

Their Mission to the Pacific Coast. One of Pleasure and Business Combined--Traveling in Luxury.

The Union Pacific passenger train, going west, that pulled out at 8 o'clock last evening had attached to the rear end, of as gorgeous a special car as any ordinary mortal would care to ride in, and it contained a very handsome, lively, intelligent party of Omaha gentlemen--representative business men of the city. They were: D. C. Adams, Guy O. Barton, M. H. Bliss, W. J. Broach, Gen. John C. Cowin, John A. Creighton, Charles H. Dewey, John H. Donnelly, Luther Drake, W. J. Footner, C. A. Fried, Benjamin Gallagher, S. B. Hayden, George A. Hoagland, P. E. Har, M. A. Kurts, G. W. Linsinger, E. Martin, Fred Moles, M. V. Morse, E. M. Moran, W. E. Parrotte, O. M. Ramsey, Thos. R. Rogers, J. M. Ross, Capt. C. B. Rust'n, J. C. Spratt, Richard Kitchen and C. S. Stebbins. R. O. Russell, of the Omaha Daily Bee, and W. J. Jackman of the Herald were also of the party.

They were accompanied by Messrs. Morse and Shelby, of the Union Pacific company, under whose auspices the excursion was gotten up, and who have charge of it on the trip. Previous to starting these gentlemen had completed elaborate arrangements for the entire comfort and enjoyment of their guests, a full supply of refreshments for the inner man being provided.

The trip is to extend over a period of seven days, the objective end and principal point of destination being Portland, Oregon, where, with fair weather and smooth sailing they expect to arrive at noon on the 11th, next Monday. While it is a journey to be fraught with pleasure, still there are other and more important features to be taken advantage of. In conversation with one of the Union Pacific officials yesterday, a reporter for The Bee was given to understand that the objects of this excursion are based upon philanthropic and practical business principles. He asserted that the Union Pacific company is desirous of doing all it can for the merchants and business men of Omaha and with that end in view offers this opportunity to introduce as many as possible of the representative men to that part of the country lying along the Oregon Short Line from Granger, Wyoming, to Portland. It is described as being a rich and productive section, capable of consuming annually an immense amount of merchandise of all kinds, and this, it is argued, might just as well be purchased at Omaha as at Chicago. Therefore it is expected that these men who have gone on the excursion will be able to leave an impression with the Wyoming and Oregon merchants that will rebound to their credit and profit.

On the way out they may stop for a day at Cheyenne. After leaving the main road and when going up the Oregon Short Line several stops will be made. Along this route there are several important mining towns, that do an immense business.

THE SILENT CITY.

A Lady Among the Marble Slabs of Prospect Hill.

What She Observed About the Tombs and Vaults of the Dead--Two Attractive Monuments--Graves of First Wives Etc.

A lady of Omaha, filled with thoughts of a home in the skies, that land beyond the stars, realms of the blest, from whence no traveller has ever yet returned to tell of its beauties, appeared here and reflections yesterday morning by visiting Prospect Hill, Omaha's silent city of the dead, and there lingered two or three hours, looking at the little mounds and reading from white marble shafts inscriptions telling whose precious dust mouldered beneath the sod. Returning home she related most interestingly, and at considerable length, the incidents and observations of her visit to that lovely spot.

In a burst of surprise that such should be the case this lady seemed more than astonished to note that among the hundreds of elegant and costly monuments that mark the last and eternal resting place of departed friends the one that stands above Dan Allen's grave by far surpasses all others. It attracts the first attention of every visitor and is longingly pointed out by the country, to do our light. Dan Allen is well remembered by the older residents of Omaha and in his day was one of the great characters of the town. Though his lot in life was cast among men of the world and he won his tricks by simple turns and twists of the wrist, yet he was known as "Honest Dan" and counted his friends by the score. Not one who could ever for a moment feel a pang of regret or remorse that his bones rest under the shadow of such a rich and handsome head stone. And it was further noticed by the fair sojourner that this man of the world is not forgotten by those who loved him in life. On the base of his monument are scattered flowers, freshly plucked from their bushes, but on no other grave, could be seen such evidences of loving devotion and tender remembrances.

The next handsome, costly and most attractive sentinel, standing as the representation of one who has gone from earth for ever, is that over the tomb where Frank Baldwin remains asleep. There are many others worthy of mention, but these two stand out the most prominent and conspicuous. Frank Baldwin was connected with the Union Pacific railroad, and was one of the most popular young men Omaha ever had. To ascertain the extent of cherished affections in which dear friends are held by the living, Prospect Hill is a fine place. Some of the graves are cared for very attentively and kept in scrupulously neat condition, while others are left to grow up in weeds, sink away and go from year to year without even being noticed. The names of several men could be mentioned who have wives buried out on the hill, but are now married again, who care not to utterly indifferent regarding the places where they lay. In all such cases as this the destroying elements of time are strikingly visible and call forth many wonderful thoughts by the upheavals and settings of the ground, by the furious blasts of winter and storm winds of spring, a large per cent of the head stones have been twisted out of shape, blown down or left standing in all sorts of leaning positions.

Speaking of the interest felt for departed relatives, and attention given to their sacred ashes, the lady sadly contrasted one miniature mound and the insignificant, unmarked grave, that is left to the head with dozens of others near by. It is the child of a wealthy man as Omaha boasts of, yet his dollars, it seems, are more precious than any desire to give the little sleeper a worthy headstone.

The old sexton pointed out to our visitor the spot where he wants to be laid, and also showed a marble slab that will stand at the head of his grave. The inscription has not been put on yet, but he is all ready when the time comes. If all the persons who own property in Prospect Hill would give their attention to having it fixed up, the place could soon be made what it ought to be. Decoration Day is not far off, when everybody will be there, and they will be glad to see if any happen to go with offerings for friends who are mouldering beneath thorns and briars and weeds and holes, they will feel bad about it.

Angostura Bitters, the world renowned appetizer and invigorator. Used now over the whole civilized world. Try it, but beware of imitations. Ask your grocer or druggist for the genuine article, manufactured by Dr. J. C. Sizer & Sons. A Man of Sense, But Dead. Arkansas Traveller. The postmaster at Lickville, Ark., writes as follows: "Don't send your papers any more to Oscar Hildner, he is dead. He was a mighty good reader, he wuz, and would sometimes read one of your jokes in such a funny way that folks would laugh. 'Twan't what he read it, 'He oughter been the editor of a paper like you'n. That feller could screw up his mouth an' make a dog laugh. He could holler just like a pester, and many a horse has took to his heels when he heard Oscar a yellin' in the woods. His daddly alls wanted him to learn the shoemakin' trade, but he had't a much ability for any such foolishness as that. If I had or had his knack I would jist screw 'em up. He couldn't write like a country clerk, but what he wrote was that. He wad't hemmed in by Webster, nor n one of your spellin'-book makers. When an idea popped into his head, and they were overvlastingly a-poppin', he jes slammed her down an' let old Webster jog along the best way he could."

"I wad't he hadder lived, fur it grieved the old man powerful, an' he'd like 'Jist to think,' said he to me 't'other day at the buryin', 'that Oscar shoulder destroyed so much vidduln' an' then died.' It's mighty nigh more than I could b'ar. I heered a feller say some time ago that you was on the lookout for a man of sense, so I thought I'd tell you about him, but he's dead."
