Carbonville lies just over the continental divide on the Pacific side, in Lake had done for her, she stoncegot and gave county, about twelve miles from Leadme some. The first dose eased my brain ville as the crow flies. It was a mush and seemed to go hunting through my room city, and at that time, 1882, was in the heetic heyday of its prosperity. Its business portion was made up largely of saloons and fare banks, and the fact that its population was mainly gentlemen exiled for various offenses from Leadville will give an idea of its moral status.

One of the very few "respectable" women in the camp was a Mrs. Jake Cory, who ran a little lunch-room and restaurant. She was sweet-faced and sweet-tempered, and had an abiding fund of patience, that enabled her to put up with the vagaries of one of the worst husbands in the world. We in the camp thought that Jack Cory was ab-solutely the worst on the face of the children well and healthy with from two earth. He was a drunken, foul-mouthed, brutal Scandinavian, who divided his time between the gambling houses and worst resorts. At these places he spent every dollar his wife earned and all he could borrow on her good name. He once went so far as to pawn her furniture down to the cooking stove over which she supported him. I mention these things to show that the sequel was not ltogether unprovoked.

His nude body stood out in bold relief against the group that surrounded him, and the chill, penetrating ar must have struck the wretch to the bone. At any rate, he prouched down and somebody called out: Give it to him now!" At the same instant the bucket of tar was lifted, and about a gallon thrown with a swash over his bare shoulders. He sprang erect at

For a moment he stood petrified, the black stuff trickling down his body and legs, and uniting with a great puddle of t on the ground. Then he slowly raised his hands to his eyes and tried to brush them clear, but as his firgers and received a good share of the pitch, he only made matters worse, and dropped his arms again. He did not seem to be able to realize what had happened, and wag-

IT WAS A COLD NIGHT.

When the work was done he was given fifteen minutes to get out of camp. He was made to understand with difficulty, but was finally started on the trail and the crowd disappeared.

Early next mornoing some miners, go ing to work, found Cory back of a building lying on the ground and mountng. The tar had by this time rubbed all over him and partly solidified. As it grew hard it contracted and every contraction had dragged with it the thousands of microscopic hairs with which the body is it required the services of only ten men insured the success of his undertaking, skin, and the men who carried him into a shed found blood on their hands. New York Times. Public sympathy is warmly enlisted on the side of that admir: 11 ostonian, Mr.

John L. Sullivan. He is now defendant in a divorce suit brought by Mrs. Sullivan, and it is clear that he is a greatly abused man. It appears from his testimony that Mrs. Sullivan is addicted to intoxication and that she is guilty of treating her husband cruelly and inhu-manly, although he is one of the kindest and most temperate of men.

It has hitherto been supposed that Mr. Sullivan himself was in the habit of getting very drunk. It is pleasant to know on Mr. Sullivan's authority that this is untrue. He was never drunk in his life and never drinks to excess. Occasionally fully confound his slokness with drunkenness. On the well known occasion when he appeared at Madison-Square Garden and informed the assembled publie that he was too sick to fight he told the truth, for he had drunk nothing stronger than brandy, and would have been able to walk with ease had not his attack of illness loosened the joints of his legs. In spite of Mrs. Sullivan's pretense that her husband had been accustomed to knock her down and kick her, for it is well known that pugilism is a
