Home Rule for Ireland.
Changes Promised and Believed to be Forthcoming.
The Castle to Go and a Royal Residence to be Maintained--Representatives of the Old Celtic Nobility.

London Correspondence New York Times.
Ireland is on the eve of home rule--something like home rule. The liberal party, through a premier, stands at last pledged to this end, although nothing can be done this session, and nothing definite will be proposed, everybody understands perfectly well that it is a thing of course.

Speaking of the natural leaders of the Irish people, it is a curious fact that among Mr. Parnell's supporters in parliament or out, to-day there is but a single representative of the ancient Celtic nobility--the O'Gorman Mahon. A nobleman indeed, he is--nearly 90 years of age, yet tall, erect, active, hearty with the nose of a cedar and piercing blue eyes which flash as proudly now as they did years ago.

Of the four great royal families who ruled, rioted, and rowed it among themselves when the Norman adventurers first set foot in Ireland representatives still remain. The O'Neill, who stands for the ancient Ulster kings, is really a fraud, for he is not an O'Neill at all, but an O'Connell, and has assumed the name because, four generations back, an ancestor of his was an O'Neill.

Of the minor, yet famous families, many have lost their line of chiefs. The O'Donnell identity is forgotten in Spain; Lord Cavan (the O'Reilly) and Earl Clancarty (the McCarty) are titles as dead as those of the Pale; the clan dignities of the O'Keilys, the O'Rourkes, and many others, are to be traced laboriously in France or Austria. But others remain. The O'Grady is now Viscount Clancarty, a petty landlord in Limerick, and of course a earnest loyalist, since his grandfather, Stianish O'Grady, was made attorney-general for Ireland, and in 1831 an Irish peer, for opposing O'Connell.

THE GRAVE OF THE LOST TRIBES.
A man calling himself T. C. Pyle, who is teaching school in the mountains of Tennessee, is said to have discovered graphically the finding of a cave by a party of railway engineers. The cave was explored for a considerable distance. At the entrance was discovered an inscription in Hebrew characters. After passing some 300 yards into the cave it enlarged into a great amphitheatre. Still further in the cave was found an appalling sight that struck terror to the hearts of the explorers.

Sheridan, Power, Dwyer, Fay, Gray, S-w, Commins, Harrison and the like. These names represent every stage of Irish conservatism in the early days of the Norman Pale, through the cruel colonization of the Tudors and Cromwells, to the milder invasion from the Lowlands--but there is none of them all which St. Patrick heard when he was in Ireland.
GREAT CHIEFS.
Their Growth and Progress in the Old World and the New.

London stands easily at the head of all modern cities, yet it has added five times as much to its population during the present century as it did during the previous one thousand years. There is a difficulty about stating the exact population of London, because the exact population of the city is not in the ordinary sense, but an aggregation of towns, an ever-spreading overgrown aggregate of houses and streets, which is constantly invading new territory and covering it with buildings. Thus the old city of London has at the last census but 50,826 inhabitants. London, within the Greater London's walls, had 3,814,571 people; the London school board district had 3,832,441 people, while the London of the metropolitan and city police districts had 4,764,312 inhabitants, nearly as many as the whole state of New York. The latter figure may be taken as the proper population of London, regarded as a community. Its increase during the present century was 880,000, or at the rate of 2.3 per cent.

A Jail Bird Who Broke Away Ten Years Ago, Now Sentenced For Rape.
Many of the older residents of this city remember well the jail break which occurred here ten years ago, in which nine prisoners made good their escape. They will therefore be interested in the following telegraphic item concerning one of those who escaped at that time:
DALLAS, Tex., June 5.--The case of Howard Montreaser, charged with outraging Emma K. Lapp, a 9-year-old German girl, three months ago, was concluded to-day. The jury this evening returned a verdict of guilty, fixing his punishment at twelve years and six months in the penitentiary. His wife, throughout the trial was his constant companion. She was devoted and frequently broke into tears. The accused manifested to the end of the trial indifference. The testimony was of the most revolting character. Montreaser is a printer, and ten years ago escaped from the Council Bluffs jail, where he was confined for theft. He liberated nine persons and fled to Texas. A reward was offered for his capture and four years later he was arrested in Dallas, and his wife's official telegraphed that they had concluded that he was a good man to have out of the state. Since then he has been a hotel in Dallas and bore an unenviable reputation. His punishment is regarded by the public as light.

The Iowa editors are expected to arrive this morning, and will make this the starting point for their great western excursion. They will spend the forenoon here, leaving about 11 o'clock. As their stay will be so short, it has been deemed best to arrange for having the time spent in driving around the city, and showing those visitors the beauties and advantages of this great western center. The mayor will necessarily be absent from the city, but he has arranged to have five carriages placed at the disposal of the city editors with which to drive the guests about the city, and several other citizens have tendered the use of their carriages. It is hoped that all who can will comply with the request of the city council, expressed in the following resolution passed by that body yesterday:
Resolved, That all citizens who own carriages or tuggles, be requested to bring them to the Pacific house Tuesday morning at 8 o'clock, to be used in carrying the Iowa editors about the city.

The subject of dress reform has engaged even the attention of so staid a paper as a North American Review writer. The theory advanced is that a skirt enclosing an air space is the warmest of garments. An amplification of his doctrine will naturally lead to a "hygienic dress form," consisting of a light wire cage suspended from a girder around the waist and covering the entire person below the neck. On this frame the dress will be hung, and will be purely immaterial--the air space enclosed by the cage being relied on to supply warmth. The professional feminine reformer will doubtless take to the "hygienic dress form," as it will furnish apparent plumpness, which is now quite fashionable.

Tabor, Ia., June 8.--A letter published in the Hamburg Times last week relates a narrow escape from Indian raiders in New Mexico of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Townsend, formerly of Tabor. The story of their hurried adventure is quite thrilling.
Saturday, pursuant to a call for an old settlers' meeting at this place, a good number of old citizens met and formed the basis for such an organization for Mills and Fremont counties. Another meeting will be held this week, when a larger attendance is hoped for. All settlers of twenty years or more residence should attend.

Not less than 5,000 skeletons were seen, each of which was reclining on his shield. They presented the appearance of men killed in battle, who had been brought there for burial. A large brass box contained manuscript giving an account of their wanderings. According to this veracious chronicle, Tennessee holds the remains of the lost tribes of Israel.
