A Compliment or an Insult? COUNCIL BLUFFS, June 16.—To the Editor.—Dear Sir: Being made aware by some of my friends of an article headed "Wonders will never end," I was astonished to find a conversation published which took place on Friday of last week, between your most gentlemanly reporter and my humble self, J. M. Lamcke, and not "J. M. Lancho," as announced. But all the same I thank you most sincerely for your strict attention toward, not mine, but the welfare of the public at large, which I am sure time will show. Furthermore I am plain to state that I am puzzled how to take the following sentence—"He was soon found attending to business, looking very different from an ordinary quack." I could hardly tell whether I take it as an insult or a compliment, but looking over the article I conclude that a compliment is the result. Now for a few words to the public as an introduction. I state fairly that I am not a learned doctor, but with the assistance of a year's study of medicine, furthered by gained experience in my travels around the globe, and at last by the help of a few, weebit of common sense, I hold in my possession the secret of a mixture called "J. M. Lamcke's Beneficial Linctum, the Conqueror," which throws any ailment known so far, deep into the shade. This is the verdict not of ten but of hundreds of people that have used it, and it will be the verdict of millions of people that will use it hereafter. In the course of time I will give further enlightenment on the subject, and till then I remain, I remain, The public's servant, J. M. LAMCKE.

Substantial abstracts of title and real estate loans. J. W. and E. L. Squires, 101 Pearl street.

Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Highsmith have just moved into their new home, No. 1715 Second avenue, and had hardly got fairly settled, when, on Monday night, about sixty of their friends came trooping in upon them for a house-warming.

The worthy folks were taken by surprise, and yielded gracefully, and did their best to have the visitors enjoy themselves. The occasion was a success in every way, and all present enjoyed themselves so heartily that the house was kept warm until a late hour of the night.

Among the guests were Chief Butler and his wife, of Omaha, both of whom were old schoolmates of Mrs. Highsmith. They were so determined to join in the merry doings in honor of their old friends, that missing the dummy train could not keep them away, and they bravely struck out on foot, and came across the bridge anyway.

Altogether the affair was a happy one, and as settling down in their new home Mr. and Mrs. Highsmith must be pretty well satisfied that a hearty welcome is always theirs whenever they choose to pull the latch-string.

Retler is offering great bargains at his merchant tailoring establishment, No. 310 Broadway. See his goods and get his prices.

BOTHERED BY BURGLARS.

Martin Hughes' Residence Entered by Unwelcome Visitors.

The discovery was made yesterday morning that during the previous night burglars had been through the residence of Martin Hughes, on Ninth avenue. It appears that the fellows gained an entrance by the front door, taking advantage of a broken pane of glass to get at the key, and turning this on the inside, the entrance became an easy one. The room of George Hughes, the son, was visited, his clothing taken out onto the front porch and the pockets rifled, a watch and chain and a few dollars in money being taken. The thieves, in reaching his room, had to pass the room of Mr. and Mrs. Hughes, the door of which was open, but they kindly neglected to search that room, otherwise the loss might have been larger, as Mr. Hughes had quite a roll in his pocket.
