INJUNCTION REFUSED. The Decision in the Caspar Case--The Barton vs. Patrick Case Non-Suited.

The first and most important matter disposed of in the district court yesterday morning was the rendering of the decision, by Judges Neville and Wakeley, in the somewhat celebrated injunction case of Caspar et al vs. the city council.

Judge Neville read the opinion, which was concurred in by Judge Wakeley. In refusing to issue this injunction, it was held: That the owners of a majority of front property on Thirteenth street in the district which it was proposed to pave, had petitioned for Colorado sandstone; that there was no evidence adduced to show that fraudulent means had been used to obtain signatures to the petition, or that there was fraud in the letting of the contract; and that there was no evidence that there was a better or lower bid than that of William Mack for the proposed paving; and that the city council and board of public works had awarded the contract in conformance with the charter, and it was not the business of the court to inquire into the questions of fact as to the fitness of Colorado sandstone as a paving material, but this was a matter to be settled between the city authorities and property owners, according to the forms prescribed; consequently, no injunction could be issued.
