Listen to Your Wife.

Manchester Guardian, June 12, 1885, says At one of the "Windows" Looking on the woodland ways! With clumps of rhododendrons and great masses of May blossoms! "There was an interesting group." It included one who had been a "Cotton spinner," but was now so "Paralyzed!" That he could only bear to lie in a reclining position. This refers to my case. I was first attacked twelve years ago with "Loomer Alzy" (A paralytic disease of nerve fibre rarely ever cured and was for several years barely able to get about. And for the last five years not able to attend to my business, although many things have been done for me. The last experiment being Nerve stretching Two years ago I was voted into the Home for Incurables! Near Manchester, in May, 1882. I am now "Advocate" "For anything in the shape of patient's Meditations." And made many objections to my dear wife's constant urging to Hop Bitters, but finally to pacify her--

Conceded!!

I had not quite finished the first bottle when I felt a change come over me. This was Saturday, November 3d. On Sunday morning I felt so strong I said to my room companions, "I was sure I could

"Walk!"

So started across the floor and back. I hardly knew how to contain myself. I was all over the house. I am gaining strength each day, and can walk quite safe without any sticks!

On my return to my own home, and hope soon to be able to earn my own living again. I have been a member of the Manchester "Royal Exchange."

For nearly thirty years, and was most heartily congratulated on going into the room on Thursday night. Very gratefully yours, JOHN BLACKBURN, MANCHESTER (Eng.) Dec. 24, 1882. Two years later am perfectly well.

JIM'S WIFE.

He was leaning against old Beauty's stall. One hand grasped the hay fork, the other was lost in the capacious pocket of his overalls. As usual, his coarse brown hair was thickly decorated with oats and tiny wisps of straw, while a mouthful of the same dry material was being ground between his teeth. Now and then Beauty's head was thrust over his shoulders accompanied by a soft whinny, this being an invitation for a treat. Generally she received an apple or a carrot, but always something, so fond of his old mare was Jim.

A ray of sunshine came through the open door and fell at his feet, perhaps paying homage to his honest, unselfish nature.

"Tell ye what, Carlton, there ain't a pootler gal this side of Dobey than my Stelly. Fact is, she's too good for sich a big clod like me; a perfect angel, she be, Carl."

"But you haven't told me how the marriage came about, Jim," I asked, interrupting a long catalogue of the lady's virtues.

"Just like me, Wal, ye see, Stelly's mother, Missus Travle, came down 'n' in the village--they'd a big place 'n' York, but busted up--and set to makin' bonnets. I met Stelly at a church picnic. She was with Jack Dowell that 'ere day, but she wouldn't go with him arterwards. Arter that it was easier 'n fallin' off a log, so when spring came we got joined."

"I would like to see this paragon of yours, old fellow," I said.

"In some ways, I am sure, and Stelly will sing a chune or two for us," he answered, his tanned face lighting up with pleasure.

The sun was going down beyond the stretch of woods skirting the meadows of Jim's farm as we went across the stable yard and through one of the loveliest gardens it has ever been my fate to see. Jim led the way to the front of the house to where upon the porch was seated a dainty little thing, who appeared at first sight to be all white muslin and yellow hair, and who seemed to be deeply interested in a book.

"That's her," whispered Jim, his mouth extended in a broad grin. "Stelly, my friend from N' York, Mr. Carlton."

The volume was hastily closed, and the vision of loveliness raised a pair of heavenly blue eyes to mine; the coral lips moved in some polite welcome, and I had met Jim's wife.

Well, I remained and had tea with them, but the promised "chune" was put off on the plea of headache; instead we all lounged out on the porch gossiping and laughing until Mrs. Kirland stopped us by saying:

"Jim, dear, I have such a bad headache, I really must leave our company and walk away."

"Stelly, love, why didn't yer tell us 'fore an' we'd stopped our gabbling. Poor pet, hadn't ye better go to bed?"

"No, indeed, I could never rest. Stay here, Jim, with our friend until I come back. I hope he will excuse my ill-mannered headache, it is something I suffer a great deal with," and after a few more words spoken in a wonderfully sweet voice, she disappeared down the garden path.

"Fact, Carlton. My Stelly often gets them headaches, and goes off down 'ere to the little brook, and sits 'ere till it goes 'way. Sometimes it takes a long time, an' I gits uneasy, but I know she wouldn't like me spyin' arter her, so I wait 'ere till she comes. Dear Stelly."

It was plainly to be seen that Jim Kirland was very much in love with his pretty little wife, since every throb of his little heart beat for this frivolous specimen of womankind. For frivolous she certainly was. Jim had assured me she did naughting 'bout the farm; only read, sewed on canvas, played chunes and slept the livelong day. "But yer know, Carl, she's werry delicate, an' heavy work would kill her." Her conversation was of the highest order. I may add.

Presently I arose to take my leave, Jim coming down to the gate with me.

"I can't go any further; she might come back any minute an' be disappointed at not findin' me. You'll come over to-morrow, Carl, won't ye? I'd be glad to see ye, an' so'd Stelly." I promised, and bid him good night.

I was soon hidden among the oaks that formed an archway on either side of the lane; dreary and dark except where the moonbeams pierced the leafy wall and fell in shafts of silver across the path. Not long after I had entered this lonely retreat I heard footsteps preceding me on the wooden walk. There was more than one, for presently a wide opening allowed the moonlight to stream through and I saw a man and a woman walking arm in arm before me. The mellow light fell on the latter's golden hair, and the folds of her white gown. As I drew near I recognized the low but clear tones of my friend's wife.

"So Jim brought his Stella after! I whatever followed them here!" I asked myself.

But a moment later a mist covered my eyes; I staggered and fell against a tree, for the man's voice did not belong to Jim, but it was a stranger's! I remembered hearing at the Dolbey hotel. I could not resist listening to the conversation. Something impelled me to almost creep back of the couple. I now knew that the man's arm was clasping Stella's slight form.

"Must it be to-morrow night, Clarence?" she was saying.

"Certainly, it's not pleasant, Stella, to be moving about this dead and alive place, and--well, I must go back to town, and of course I want you to go."

"But it's so soon, dear, and it will hurt Jim so much. You can't imagine how fond he is of me." The voice was pleading.

"Pah! that country squash! You are so careful of his precious feelings, my dear, perhaps you had better return to his humble abode, churn butter and pick potatoes, since you prefer his boorish love to mine."

"Oh, Clarence, dearest, how can you treat me so cruelly! I'll go with you any time, anywhere. What do I care for Jim when I have your love!"

I heard no more. How I reached my lodgings I never knew, but I perfectly remember plunging my head into cold water to ease its throbbing. Should I tell my friend at once, make miserable his life, and then nothing come of it, perhaps, or let his wife's despicable conduct take its own way and reap the consequences! What was I to do!

Had she gone? Was poor Jim enduring torments worse than mine? Or had she repeated and withstood the tempter's wiles? I had heard that voice in New York, on the train, and somewhere 'ere, and I knew to whom it belonged. Stella was lost.

One evening, two days later, a man, a

Miss Minnie Vorhies, who won the prize for essays at the last convocation of the Elmira college by delivering as her own composition an old article from Scribner's Magazine, has returned the medal.

Prof. Henry A. Fink, of Hamilton college, has been elected to the chair of oratory and English literature at Amherst college and is understood to be willing to accept the position.

The new president of Bowdoin college, Rev. William H. Hyde, is only 27 years of age. He is a graduate of Harvard, an accomplished theologian and writer, and a fine baseball player and sparrer.

Professor James A. Dana, of Yale, has been elected to the chair of natural history at the Royal Society of London, an honor never conferred upon any other American, with but a single exception--Professor Asa Gray, of Harvard.

The presence of a Japanese gentleman in our public schools and reporting to his government such points as may suggest themselves to him in the course of his visit, is no less a compliment to our system than an evidence of intelligence on the part of those who sent him abroad.

At the commencement exercises of the grand old institution of the State of Wisconsin, W. Va., three of the twenty-seven graduates were colored pupils who had completed the course of study in the schools devoted to their race. This is the first time that white and colored pupils have been graduated at the same place south of Mason and Dixon's line.

Professor C. K. Adams, of Michigan University, who is likely to succeed President White. Cornell is a man who has won fame gradually as a teacher. He was a tutor almost the butt of students, who gave him the nickname of "Drop Eye," because of a certain peculiarity of his eyes. He has now become, however, in a school of note, a successful educator and author, and a man widely respected and exceptionally popular.

Dr. John C. Branner, late of the geological survey of Pennsylvania, has been elected to the newly established professorship of geology in the Indiana University, at Bloomington. Prof. Branner has accompanied Professor Hart, of Cornell University to Brazil, in 1874, and was his assistant geologist on the imperial geological survey of that country until the suspension of the work and the death of Professor Hart. Still later he made another trip to Brazil as the special agent of the United States department of agriculture.

The experiment with industrial education at the Boston school, Salem, Mass., has proved successful. The pupils of the three upper classes were enlisted in the work about five months ago, no rewards being given. The first week of existing of about 150 articles was made, including waste-baskets, mats, a full-made dress, ties, aprons, scarfs, pillow-cases, darning, quilts, button-cases, sofa-covers, paintings and line from the girls. The boys made engines, chairs, cabinets, bird-houses, boxes, drawings, and boats and carried leather, besides many other things. The girls also exhibited some excellent specimens of plain and fancy cooking, one loaf of raised bread taking the prize. Perhaps nothing showed more real skill than the large size of leather which a boy canned, curried and finished with his own hands.

The cross which the princess of Wales recently gave to St. Peter's church, St. Louis, is of silver brass, with triple formed points, beautifully engraved, with four Irish crystals at the extremities of a garnet set in a royal star at the junction of the cross. It has been placed upon a brass pedestal of three steps, on which the inscription is engraved: "To the rock and corner stone of the church of St. Peter, from Her Royal Highness Alexandra, the Princess of Wales, 1885."

The Rev. Dr. Charles A. Briggs, professor of Hebrew in the Union Theological Seminary, recently declared by a letter to be the most accomplished biblical scholar of this country, has come out strongly against the revised version of the Old Testament. He holds the revision to be a gross mistake in accepting as the basis of their work the same Masoretic Hebrew text that was used by the authors of King James' version, and he concludes that in short time the new version will need revision.

Speaking of old landmarks, the Dutch Reformed church building in Harlem, situated at Third Avenue and One Hundred and Twenty-first street, is to be moved so as to face the latter street and leave room for the erection of a massive business building on the avenue. This organization dates back some 200 years--$73,000, and owns property amounting to $131,000. It is building a new and handsome church edifice at Sixth Avenue and One Hundred and Twenty-third street at a cost of $131,000, but will continue to use the old structure as a mission chapel and for the benefit of the West Side portion of the congregation. The ecclesiastical organization is a very strong one, as is the case with all of the Dutch Reformed congregations in New York city.

The Most Wonderful Fluid.

The blood. It is our life. It must be in good order to go through the very delicate little tubes through which it is constantly coursing. Of itself the fluid is without color; but, as we look at it, it is a deep red; the corpuscles give it that color, by reason of the iron in them. The corpuscles are so small that it takes 3,100 of them laid in a straight line to make an inch. Brown's Iron Bitters carries iron to these little corpuscles, and thus enriches the blood when it is poor, thus conferring health and vigor. This famous tonic is only a dollar a bottle, at the druggists.

The Most Wonderful Fluid.

The blood. It is our life. It must be in good order to go through the very delicate little tubes through which it is constantly coursing. Of itself the fluid is without color; but, as we look at it, it is a deep red; the corpuscles give it that color, by reason of the iron in them. The corpuscles are so small that it takes 3,100 of them laid in a straight line to make an inch. Brown's Iron Bitters carries iron to these little corpuscles, and thus enriches the blood when it is poor, thus conferring health and vigor. This famous tonic is only a dollar a bottle, at the druggists.

The ladies of Augusta, Ga., are boycotting a dry goods firm which refused to close their store at 6 o'clock as other business houses did so as to give their clerks a rest.

"Can't Be Beat."

"This comes from one whose case is one among thousands. Mr. A. R. Jennings, of Bathurstville, Va., had suffered from dyspepsia, but cheerfully writes, "Brown's Iron Bitters can't be beat in coming up to all that is claimed for it." Ask any respectable druggist for Brown's Iron Bitters, at a dollar a bottle.

The Union Transit company has been incorporated, with a capital of $5,000,000, the object being to build elevated railroads in Chicago.

The Poor Little Ones.

We often see children with red eruptions on face and hands, rough, scaly skin, and often sores on the head. These things indicate a depraved condition of the blood. In the growing period children have need of pure blood by which to build up strong and healthy bodies. If Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" is given, the blood is purged of its bad elements, and the child's development will be healthy, and as it should be. Scrofulous affections, rickets, fever-sores, hip-joint disease or other grave maladies and sufferings are sure to result from neglect and lack of proper attention to such cases.
