THE BARBER'S STORIES.

Fresh Cuts for Careless Customers in the Barber's Chair—Losing the Tip of a Nose and the Whole of an Ear—A St. Louis Mistery Explained.

Chicago Herald.

"Do you know that you just had a narrow escape, sir? Well, you did. About ten seconds ago I came near cutting you to the bone. No, I wasn't mad at you. I didn't mean to murder you. And if I had cut you it would have been your own fault. I had my fingers on your face and was just putting the razor to your cheek, when you suddenly turned your head.
If I hadn't been as quick as a cat, the razor would have plowed through your cheek. Cat a man once that way, Justice that way. The man in the next chair spoke to him just as I was putting the razor down, and in half a second there was a gasp in his cheek two inches long and clear to the bone. Took me an hour to stop the blood. Shaved that man fifty times since, but you could waver your last week-end ticket that he kept his head still after that. Yes, we have to be very careful with our customers. They're awful careless.
They don't seem to realize that we have in hand a weapon just as sharp as steel can be made, so sharp that a baby could cut a man's heart out with it. The way some customers twitch around perfectly awful. Well, you could waver like a mouse. Drunken men are the worst to handle. There's been ten times as many customers cut because they were drunk as there have been 'cause the barbers were drunk. One day a tipsy man came in for a shave. 'Barber,' he says, says he, 'I'm afraid to shave with ye. Jus' had or row with a nigger down on levee, and he tried to razor me. Will you promise to be mighty careful with that ar weapon of yours?' Of course I promised, and the man sat down. Got along all right until I reached his upper lip. Just as I was making the up-shave on his lip he nodded forward in a drunken stupor. The razor caught the end of his nose, and off came a piece as big as a strawberry, pretty high as that. But the man never woke up. I quietly picked up the strawberry piece, stuck it on, wiped the blood away and went on shaving him. I let him sleep about half an hour so the nose could cool dry off a little, and then rused him. While he was putting on his coat and paying his bill, I check I was deathly afraid the little would drop off, and he walked out, never knowing the difference. Oh his way up-stairs he stumbled and fell and hit his nose. He rushed back into the shop shouting that the nigger had cut his nose off. I jumped up in amazement. 'Mr. Smith,' says I, 'that's wonderful. When you came in here you had a complete nose; that I'll swear to. But now your nose is a little bit shorter. You're a little bit shorter, but I'm not a doctor, and I can't give you my nose.' Our punning barber—the same one that was killed a few weeks later, and with a razor, too, for getting off the old 'lyre' gag on a colored musicant—up and worked in the old chestnut about 'nobody knows,' while I went out on the steps to look for the missing piece.
Of course it wasn't there, and finally we found it between his shirt and his coat.
We stuck it on again, and the man went out vowing vengeance on the nigger that drew the razor upon him down on the levee. To this day he doesn't know who cut him, but he makes me perspire some days when he comes in, when we inquire if he has found the man that cut him, he shows the hit of a big revolver and says:
'No, but I'm a little shorter, and I've just open my mouth and let 'em see it.'"
The doctor, an amiable looking German attendant, with strong spectacles and a grizzled beard, opened the little door in the rear of the case, and the dealer and the reporter stood directly behind him. He picked up one of the big snakes. There was a dart of the reptile's tongue, a wild twisting and dapping, and then the dealer and the reporter went away. When the first shock of surprise was over they returned with circumspection. The doctor had put the anaconda back into the cage and had bolted the door.

Testing the Birds as Messengers for the Sea.
Philadelphia Bulletin.

A. P. Baldwin, Newark, is testing homing pigeons as messengers for the sea.
One bird, liberated by Officer Croom, made the journey from the steamship Wasaland on its last trip from New York when 313 miles from Sandy Hook.

The start was at 1 p. m., making it a hard day to reach land by night. The bird did it, however. Two birds were liberated from the steamer, No. 1 at 5 a. m., on one 7, when 200 miles out, went at once toward the west but did not reach home. No. 2 started seventeen minutes later, 235 miles out, hesitated, then flew west, then east, then west again, arriving at home on the same afternoon. It bore a message as follows: "No. 2, at 9:17 a. m.; No. 1 at 9:40 west west. Richard Vandamm."

Three birds owned by J. G. Ward, Keppert, N. J., have been sent for liberating a short distance beyond New Orleans to bring the air line distance covered to 1,150 miles. This is the greatest number ever sent by one fancier to fly from over 725 miles. Two of the birds made the journey from Bristol, Tenn., (300 miles) this season, and one has made the journey from New Orleans to New York, a distance of 1,150 miles. The next start from New Orleans will probably be from the birds now waiting in Bristol, Tenn., and its vicinity favorable for the 600 miles' journey to home, and from others that have already made this journey owned by S. G. Lamberton, Keppert. But the birds are to be prepared for it by a journey from 750 miles, and then the extreme distance, not less than 1,000 miles, to New York, and thence to New Orleans, as they are in fair feather. Since the attempt has been made to cover the distance from New Orleans the fanciers will not spare their efforts on the birds until it is accomplished.

The Quaker City club, Philadelphia, will make its distance race from Pensacola, Fla., distance air line 930 miles.
The man, and the birds are in fair feather. The race will start from New Orleans and marked under federation direction by the liberator. They will leave home on next Wednesday morning. The entries thus far are J. McGarhey, 3; P.
W. Krouse, 2; J. Wilmer, 1; C. Hensal, 1; P. Murphy, 1; R. L. Hayes, 1. The entries remain open until Tuesday evening. The first return is to win its spurs for a fact. "Malta, as they say, until with its Penacola," its left and register numbers, and is to be given its freedom from all journeying thereafter.

Don't Mind an Anaconda Bite.
New York Sun.

"Got some good-looking anacondas, haven't you?" asked a dealer in animals.
shows the hit of a big revolver and says:
The doctor, an amiable looking Ger-
door.

"There," said he, "you can see the size of his teeth from these bites, I didn't catch him near enough to his own eyes. Who said anything about the mosquito doing the cutting with his own knife? When the mosquito stabbed the man the man made a lunge for the mosquito. He didn't catch him, but my razor caught the man's cheek, with results as heretofore described.

"The worst cut I ever heard of a man getting at a barber's shop. Certainly, sir.
Always willing to entertain a customer with reminiscences, but will you be kind enough not to question my veracity? The story I am going to tell you may be hard to believe. I didn't see the incident myself, but I know it to be a fact, as I read it in a newspaper, and as there's nothing political in it, and nothing affecting rich corporations or street railway magnates, the chances are that it was true. It happened truth. It happened in St. Louis six or eight years ago. A barber was shaving a man, and all of a sudden, so quick that he hardly realized it, he cut off the man's left ear as sleek as if it had been an apple on a stem. Yes, sir, cut it clean off at one slash, and the ear fell upon the floor. The customer sued the shop for damages and got judgment of $2,000 against the boss. The barber never could tell how he happened to do it. It was a mystery to him, as well as to the man that lost the ear. But I've had my own surmise about the matter. What I've been telling you is facts, and you mustn't mix it up with what I'm going to say. You will observe that I said very carefully of the man my wife says, says she, 'Admiral, you're the most truthful man I ever knew.'
'Thank you, my dear,' says I, breaking in.
'Yes, Admiral, says she, 'you're the most truthful man I ever heard of—considering the amount of talking you do.' Just like a woman. A woman, oh yes, my opinion about the ear cutting case.
Well, I think as the customer was a St.
Louis man—mind, no, I put this out as a theory, not as a fact—that he must have been wagging his ears backward and forward and in that way run one of them up against the razor. That is my notion.
Will you have a hair cut. Shampoo Rub up! Moisture colored! Nothing to-day! All right, sir, but you'll call again, won't you? No, you won't. I May I ask why? Live in St. Louis, eh?
Oh, I see. Good day, sir. Don't hurt your ear on the wall as you go up stairs, sir."

A Gigantic Galvanometer,
New York Tribune.

There has just been completed at Cornell university the largest galvanometer in the world. It was built under the direction of Prof. William A. Anthony, of the department of physics. Over a year was spent in its construction. The instrument contains all the accessories that is necessary for making the most complete and accurate measurements of any kind of electrical apparatus, and is valued at several thousand dollars. There are four circles, each two meters in diameter. Dr. Guyer, of the Stevens Institute of technology, and several electrical engineers from a distance, together with Professors Anthony and Moler, of Cornell, are at present engaged in making tests of the aid of the galvanometer in the strength of the current of a powerful dynamo sent here for that purpose, which is run at 1,200 revolutions a minute.

The instrument has been mounted and placed in the physical and chemical laboratory building and will prove a valuable addition to the electrical engineering department of the university.

Strikes in Berlin.
London Globe Berlin correspondence, June 29th.

Although the workmen's riots, one might almost say insurrections, in Bohemia were brought on by dissatisfaction of a very different nature than a mere question of wages, they have, as feared and expected by employers here, proved the signal for a wider outbreak of the strike epidemic. The most palpable effect at the present moment is the enormous dimensions of the masons' and bricklayers' strike, thanks to which the numerous immense barracks of houses in course of rapid construction, in order to be finished before the new and highly desirable building laws come into effect, are just now standing almost as desolate and unfinished in aspect as some of the kins of Bavaria's begun and long-neglected castles. Only a week ago the greatest activity prevailed in the building trade. To-day all is still; the workmen are walking about dressed in the Sunday clothes, and holding frequent crowded meetings, while I sadly fear the wives and children are suffering, if not starving, at home. The workmen demand an increase of five per cent on their wages, together with a clearer limitation of the normal working day, the burden of their grievance being that the master gains an enormous percentage on each house erected, and that they who have to bear the heat and burden of the day are justified in claiming a greater share of its profits. They flatter themselves that they have chosen a very favorable moment for the furtherance of their object; and so they have in a certain sense, for it cannot be denied there is at the present time an unusual demand for their labor. But they forget that the crisis once passed, there must of necessity be a reaction in the building trade, of which the masters will, in their turn, gladly take advantage.
For the last year it has been the constant aim of speculators to get their walls up before the 1st of July; and tenements intended to let rather than live in have been run up with marvellous celerity. The little old-fashioned houses, once so characteristic of old Berlin, have nearly all been cleared away to make room for many storied edifices; and the result has been, over, as a natural consequence, building will, for the next few years, be pretty much at a standstill, and the bricklayers glad to get work on any terms. Aware of this, the masters are holding out; many are endeavoring to get their contracts prolonged for some weeks, and all are resolved not to give way. From what I hear, it is not unlikely that the workmen will give in, and that before long the trowel and hammer will be again at work in all directions. The contractors for the new houses of parliament and the market halls are sadly put out by this strike, for in such colossal undertakings it is no easy matter to make up for lost time and opportunely. Native workmen disdain the threat of importing foreigners, chiefly Italians, as they say until they have become accustomed to German ways their help would largely partake of the character of a hindrance.
Meanwhile, the police are actively on the alert to prevent strikers holding socialist meetings, and have no easy task to banish the latter element, which is more or less at the root of the evil, as it especially makes its headquarters in the parish in dragging the Sunday movement and women's work questions into their discussions.

The Ore in the Black Hills.
A Custer City (Dakota Territory) correspondent of the Metal Worker says:

"A company of gentlemen from Scranton, Germany, who are engaged in the purchase of land, and will also build works in the near future, and within a year or two these companies expect to be prepared to ship mercantile tin to market. The ore is found in veins or lodes that are in every sense of the word true fissure-veins that vary from three feet to thirty feet in thickness, and the spar or vein matter of which the tin is found lies between walls of micaceous slate. The lodes are running, generally speaking, from northeast to southwest. The spar, as it is called here, is of a very brittle nature and easy of reduction by stamps. It carries on the surface and to a depth of from ten to twenty feet from three to ten per cent of tin. There are, to my certain knowledge, several lodes that carry a great profit and a great depth, it seems to me that our prospects here are much better than in any other country for a great mining center in the production of tin; and if capitalists will take this matter in hand and develop these mines there is no reason in the world to prevent this district from furnishing all the tin that may be required for use in the United States for years to come.
