THE SNOW-CAPPED HIGHWAY.

A Ride on the Rocky Banks of the Roaring Arkansas, And Rounding Snow Balls on the Summit of Mount Blanco--A Mound of Flesh and a Vastness of Brains.

Correspondence of the Bee. Canon City, Colorado, may be a place of considerable importance, but neither it or the penitentiary beyond, where the convicts are busily engaged cutting and quarrying stone, have much interest for us.

There is nothing remarkable to be seen unless it is an awkward, struggling stream forcing its way through slaty banks. The Arkansas, some can say. The smooth, open country, with its distant ranges and lower, nearer hills is passed. The banks of the roaring, white flumed river grow steep, rugged and more lofty.

Deeper, narrower, grows the gorge. Far into the tender depths of the sky, close by the trailing stars the mighty crags rear their lofty heads thousands of feet above us.

The air grows chilly. Around us lie the overhanging hills tipped with snow, which reflect the rosy light of the setting sun, while the green sky above is crowned with a halo of smethyst, in whose tender depths shines the evening star.

The train stops about five minutes and every one hurries out, anxious to gather a little snow this last day of July. Some one shouts "all aboard" just as we reach the coveted bank. Rushing, stumbling, puffing we reach our berths and wait fully ten minutes for the train to move on.

Real and Baptismal Names. The dissonance with respect to General Grant's real name is bringing to the surface an amount of ignorance and misconception which is interesting, as popular errors of tenacious hold always are.

The whole thing rests upon a misconception. The laws of this country know nothing whatever of baptism or baptismal names. Baptism has no more legal effect with us than circumcision or confirmation or communion, or any other ordinance of ecclesiastical administration.

Yet all these persons have names. A man's name is that which he calls himself and is called. When Bret Hart habitually was named Francis Bret Hartie, that was his name, but when he dropped the Francis it ceased to be a part of his name.

by those names. So in General Grant's case his name was Ulysses Simpson Grant, whether he was baptized by that or any other name. The whole misconception grows out of the two errors, first that baptism has a legal character, and second that it requires a legislative act to make a change in a man's name. Both are errors of a tenacious character.

A HEAVY VERDICT. A Crippled Brakeman Receives Forty Thousand Dollars from the Santa Fe Railroad Company.

The case of Jared Cox against the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe railroad company, for damages for injuries received by him, has been on trial for the last eight days in the district court of Wyandotte county, resulting yesterday morning in a verdict in favor of Cox for the sum of $40,000, being the full amount claimed by him.

The night was rainy and dark, and as Cox was on the railing between the sleeper and coach seat of the ball car, he was thrown between the cars and was carried or dragged under the train 800 or 1,000 feet, and was found lying by the track a few moments after an insensible condition, his coat badly torn, his pants and drawers torn to shreds, his skull fractured, his right arm broken at the wrist, the palm of his right hand torn out, the back of it scarred and mutilated so that a portion had to be amputated.

A TALK WITH ROBERT BONNER.

What the Mare May Do Hereafter--The Effect of Running Blood. New York Tribune. The busiest day in the week for Robert Bonner is Friday, for on that day the New York Ledger goes to press. He spared a few minutes yesterday, however, to talk with a Tribune reporter about the great performance of Maud S, at Cleveland.

"The cutting down of her record one-half a second," said he, "was not a surprise to me. I expected it, for I had had telegrams stating that she was all right. You know I told you about a week ago that she was forty pounds overweight, but the weather has been favorable for overcoming that difficulty, and I have no doubt she has been reduced in weight. It was really the first fast mile she has had this season. My brother David, and my son Frederick have been with her for about two weeks and had full charge of my interests. The Tribune printed a dispatch last morning from my son, Frederick, who was very careful, and always weighs everything he says, and his statement as to the condition of the track can be relied upon.

"It was indeed a remarkable performance, even leaving out the condition of the track, which was admittedly somewhat slow. First quarter in 32 1/2, a 2-11. The second quarter was recorded in 31 1/2 seconds, a 2-09 gait. That made the mile 1:04 1/2. That was fast enough to take the life out of a horse yet she made the next quarter, around the turn, in 31 seconds, a 2-04 gait. Around the curve she was probably right within herself, of course Blair did not check her. As an evidence of her capacity, the fact that under the circumstances of a slow track and the first fast mile she had had this season, she trotted the last half mile a quarter of a second faster than she did the first half, speaks for itself.

"It was the four mile running blood that kept her up for such a performance, without it such a feat would be impossible. The whole experience in breeding trotters proves it. Thoroughbred blood is indispensable if you would combine staying qualities with speed. Both Maud S. and Jay-Eye-See, the two greatest performers on the trotting turf of the world, have the four mile running blood coursing through their veins. One traces through its dam to Lexington and the other to Boston.

"I own Dexter and Laras, each of whom reigned as king in the course of his trotting career. Dexter is old and in the acre and yellow leaf. Laras is still frisky and fast. Neither of these, however, is to be compared to Maud S. I do not say that within a year or two a horse may be brought out that will eclipse anything she may be able to do, for in the advanced state of breeding at the present day we do not know what to expect. If, for one, would welcome a trotter that could do it, for I have devoted a great deal of my money toward finding out the limit of speed in this country.

In regard to the Cleveland track and the climatic conditions being favorable to the highest speed of the great mare, Mr. Bonner said: "I can best cover that by giving a statement of Maud S.'s former manager made to a reporter of a western paper before this trial. 'I believe,' he said, 'that Maud S. would stand a better chance of beating her record over the Rochester, Chicago or Providence track than she would over the Cleveland track.' That I think is the general impression."

In regard to further efforts to be made by Maud S. this season to beat the record Mr. Bonner said: "I shall undoubtedly give further exhibitions with her, but just where or when I have not, as yet, made up my mind, nor have I decided as to whether I will harness her double with one of my other horses and use her as a team trotter, though it is more than possible that I may do so. This I am determined upon, however, that everybody shall have an opportunity of seeing her before she is permanently retired. As to her condition after her effort at Cleveland, I have only to show you a dispatch from her driver which I have just received.

The dispatch read: "July 31, 1885--Robert Bonner, William and Spruce streets, New York City: I have driven Maud S. this morning. She is as fine as silk. W. W. BARRE. Mr. Bonner received the following congratulatory dispatch from William H. Vanderbill: 'SARATOGA, July 31, 1885--Robert Bonner, New York Ledger, New York: I telegraphed answer to W. Edwards this morning. Maud S. is a wonderful mare, as I always said. I believe she can beat the world with perfect ease. Besides, she is so handsome and gentle. I congratulate you, and hope she may continue to please you. W. H. VANDERBILT.'
