. A Poisonous Lunch,

Mrs. Heltman, wife of the proprietor of the St. Jo house, and her sister, Mis-Mellie Kuhl, before retiring to rest Wednesday night, took a little lunch, in which was included a piece of new cheese of factory make. Soon after the lunch they were both taken ill, and Dr. Pinney was called in to care for them. He found symptoms resembling those of arsenic polsoning in several respects, and it was only by prompt and continued treatment that the sufferers were relieved. There was no question but that the ladies had been poisoned, and it is thought that it must have been some matter in the cheese, an analysis of which will be made to determine it more

He Frankly Tells Why He Com menced Fighting the Cemetery.

Alderman Mynster now declares that he has withdrawn from the fight against the cemeterf, at least from that part of the contest which is led by Colonel Scott. He says that all he went into it for was because he wanted a road cut through one corner of the cemetery so as to open up a handsome driveway along one of the handsomest portions of the county leading around to where the property of himself and mother is located. He openly stated in the council that if the trustees of the cemetery would consent decided upon hastily. to have this road cut through, the injunction suit against the cemetery would be dropped in ten minutes. "You know John Kenney was yesterday sent to when I made this statement, and gave it the jail for thirty days for grabbling a the straight lie, and said that the case would not be dropped, and so I just drew out of the whole affair then and

The plan as explained in brief by the boys had done what he could to fix it happier and easier.

It is reported that the "mayor of my city," instead of starting a campaign paper that if the road could be opened up from here, is to join with Mr. Resgan and Oakland avenue through the cemetery, others in buying the Das Moines Leader. It would not take more than thirty feet off the corner, and would thus make an easier and better entrance of Beard and Davidson into one large to the cemetery itself, and at the same he secured for the boy a pass time would give an opening into this for part of the way to Chicago, and before store is progressing well, and the place magnificent drive, there being about a will be occupied by the owner of the mile of level road, from every point of which the view of the city and country is grander than any view to be had in Fairmount park, and grander even than the by Dave Gray, died yesterday, having view from the well-known point at the been sick only a snort time. "I have made just as fair a proposition to the trustees as anybody could. I told them that we would furnish the lot owners with other lots, and pay for the transferring of the graves, and make everything satisfactory to them, if the trustees would give their consent. I also made another proposition, to the effect that we would go up North Second street if they would allow us to go through the cemetery in the middle, and thus

This would not be quite as desirable as the other road, but we would get along with that, but the trustees they do not seem disposed to let us have anything, I am going to keep on fighting them until they have to let us through.

Such is a fair statement of the motives actuating one of those who has been in the avowed purpose of making his point by some other way-just how, he does not say. If the city wants a chance to trusters, who are not only as much interested in Council Bluffs as other citizens, but who are known as clear-headed bus iness men, could more easily be persuaded by a showing of facts than of threats or suits. The question as to whether it is desirable and practicable to open this road, is one which could easily be decided,

There seems not much doubt but that the figures will prove satisfactory and that the cost of all can be kept within the limits fixed. Still the board proposes to take the safer and surer way. Next Wednesday the board will meet again, at which time the bids for the old court house, and for the furnishing of the steam fittings and the building of the boiler house, will be opened, and then with all the figures before them the supervisors can easily determine. A COWBOY DOCTOR.

and this is too important a matter to be

He Sets a Badly Broken Arm as Well as a Surgeon Could,

On Wednesday a cowboy from Cheyenne arrived here, who was working his way to his eastern friends. He had a disabled arm, having had it broken in two places by the fall of a horse about up, and had put the arm in plaster of paris, so that it could not move or be moved. The crippled cowboy was almost out of money, and his story appealing to the sympathy of the super-SANITARY visor of the poor, Mr. Hardin, he secured for the boy a pass starting him on his journey, had Dr. Macrae examine the arm. The doctor took off the plaster paris, and redressed the arm. He found that the bones were knitting well, and that the arm had been cared for as well as if a surgeon had been employed. As the doctor put it, "If the cowboy who fixed that arm is not a doctor he comes pretty near being one." No one not having some knowledge of surgery could have set the bones and bandaged that arm in any such manner. Whether the fellow who had the broken arm was lying about a cowboy having set it or not is difficult to determine, but the authorities were quite well satisfied with his honesty in other particulars. Possibly some educated physician who is roaming the plains for health or recreation may have done the bone-seting.
