It was only with considerable difficulty that an explanation could be learned to the effect that Ollie Wilson, the night operator in the telephone office had heard some mysterious noises, as if some one was trying to burglarize some store, and he called Officer O'Brien's attention to it. The officer, in company with Charlie Liebold, located the sounds in the alley in the rear of Burhorn's jewelry store on Broadway, and cross alley for Bancroft street. He was called on to halt, but kept going, and three shots were fired at him, but in vain. He turned south on Bancroft street, and leaving the sidewalk, ran down the middle of the street, where his footsteps would not sound so clearly, and disappeared in the darkness. It is thought that he was planning to burglarze some one of the stores on Main street, but this is simply a guess, there being no marks discovered of any attempted break-
