The Sacred Concert. Come, let us to the concert go, Alton's Sunday night. It is a sacred concert, so of course it must be right.

AN ACCOUNT SETTLED. The tale I heard to unfold is a true one. I heard it one drowsy afternoon last week, while resting after the labors of the Exposition.

Robichaux? No! Ha! There was a fine man—but spool—oh, yes, quite spool; effectively run." And then, at first in broken installments, but soon warming to her work, she told me the story—told it with a chic and a flavor which I would give much to reproduce.

His awakening was sudden and complete. Of course there was no mistake about the property. He found that intact, and certainly by good management it might be made to yield a livelihood. For the rest—a blank. He had left New Orleans too young to understand the gulf separating him from his moral and intellectual equals.

When Polyte first returned, and while yet he was ignorant of the fate awaiting him, he sought out a girl with whom, at the time of his departure, he had been passionately in love. She, too, was of the accursed class, but he had not thought of that before. He scarcely realized it until she had stridden down the main street to the well-numbered house where Melanie's dark eyes had so often shined light upon the quiet sitting-room for him.

There is a tendency to set all the trimmings of the water-gate party. As such suggests the idea, when one is adjusted, the wearer, in a fit of absent-mindedness, has made a mistake, and put on her chaparral instead of her dress.

Two years passed. Outwardly resigned and accepting the situation, Polyte had opened an office in Exchange alley, not far from St. Louis street. The location was convenient to Richelieu's and Antoine's, where he acted as confidential adviser to the leading men of his class, such people as Arlette, Mary, F. X. Dumas, Dubouché and the like.

The Sweet Sympathy She Spoke. It was a youthful dupe, And the knob upon his case He sucked in solidly, As he looked out on the main.

HONEY FOR THE LADIES. Most of the new fancy ribbons are pasted. Paper plates, with gray borders in relief, have just been introduced.

It is a remarkable decrease in the number of marriages in proportion to the population. In 1850, and the average of the number of marriages was 26,000 a year for a number of years; but following the panic of 1857 there was a drop to 23,480.

Necklaces are fashionable. The patterns are diversified, but the link of a party. There are some lovely enameled styles, with diamond dewdrops.

A woman, Magdalena, N. M., recently gave birth to five children at one time, and they are all alive. This is a record for the state.

The annual report of the superintendent of public instruction for New Hampshire shows that the number of children attending the public schools of the state was nearly 100,000 in 1884 and 1885. A falling off in the patronage of the common schools in a New England state is a striking evidence of the fact whether there was any special cause for such a falling off last year.
