Mr. Casey is a Pennsylvania gentleman possessing all the managerial instincts and qualifications which one obtains in years of fortune making in the great oil regions. He has the fact and business capacity to conduct a first-class house, and the gentility and high culture to insure all gussts of the most courteous treatment. The house of which he takes possession is beyond all question of a doubt the finest of its character in the west. It is certain that there is no house of its rate; between Chicago and San Francisco as well furnished. The fittings and furnishings throughout, the table and general conveniences are not excelled by the high-priced hotels of the city, and yet the Arcade offers it accommodations at the rate of $2 per day. The elegant hostelry is with confidence recommended to the patronage of all visitors to the city.

THE OMAHA FAIR.

Something About the Preparations in

How the Grounds Lock-The Pro gramme.

The grounds of the Omaha exposition association never presented a handsomer appearance on the eve of any previous fair than at the present time. All the fences, pens, stalls and buildings have been freshly painted and the substantial additions and repairs made indicate that the association has come to stay and make the annual fair a permanent tustitheater is a substantial, convenient and ornate structure, topped with towers that furnish a bird's eye view of the entire grounds. It is set back from the the track fence about five feet, the space between being sodded. A pool room adjoins the west end, with the refreshment booth three winks away.

The quarter stretch and judges' stand have been improved and fenced, and the grand stand moved to the center of the circle. Several large and handsome pri-vate buildings are approaching comple-tion, and a string of stock stalls has been oult along the entire length of the south ence. The stock stalls now extend along he fence on three sides, and nearly doubles the former number. A number of booths are being put up and the agri cultural implement halls are ready for the reception of farm machinery. The capacity of the power hall has been doubled and the engine and machinery are being put in place. Preparations for the fair are well advanced in all departments, and with fine weather it is safe to say that the coming week will witness the finest exhibition and largest crowds ever seen in the west. THE FAIR PROGRAMMEE. A great many people are asking as to the dates of the various races during the fair. In order to satisfy all such inquir-
