GERMINAL, or, the Story of a Great Miner's Strike.

BY EMILE ZOLA. Translated from the French.

RESUME OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS.

Anton Lantier, a young mechanic out of work, reaches the coal mines of Monstout, France, each morning and penniless. The death of a miner makes a vacancy and he secures employment in the Vulture mine.

CHAPTER XV. "Listen," said Mrs. Mahon to her husband, "when you go to Monstout for your pay, bring me a pound of coffee and a half pound of sugar."

CHAPTER XVI. "You must think I'm going to get some thousands," said Mrs. Mahon to her husband, "when you go to Monstout for your pay, bring me a pound of coffee and a half pound of sugar."

CHAPTER XVII. "You ought to hurry; and if those gentlemen are there, you must talk with them about your father," said the doctor to Mrs. Mahon.

CHAPTER XVIII. "We won't be hungry when we're dead," said Mahon to his wife. He added a few nails to his shoes, and decided to set out as he was to be paid that afternoon.

CHAPTER XIX. As Anton arrived at the saloon, a miner who was taking a drink of his return from Monstout, was telling the men that a strike was being called for the next day.

CHAPTER XX. Rasseleur had seated himself near Anton, and both listened with an air of consternation. They were able to hear but Madame Rasseleur, who was leaning on the bar.

CHAPTER XXI. "What an idea," murmured the tavern-keeper. "The company may be striking, or the workers may be striking, or both."

CHAPTER XXII. "Then you're against the strike?" cried the woman Rasseleur, without leaving the bar. And when he had replied yes, she made him be silent.

CHAPTER XXIII. Anton had been thinking with his eyes on the drink which had been served him. Finally he raised his head.

amount of money without touching it, shivering slightly. Of course he expected poor pay, but it could not be as little as that; they must have calculated wrong.

CHAPTER XXIV. "Go on, you're not the cashier," said Anton to the man who had just spoken to him. "We have deducted two Sundays and four days that there was no work; that leaves you only ninety francs for the month."

CHAPTER XXV. "You're not the cashier," said Anton to the man who had just spoken to him. "We have deducted two Sundays and four days that there was no work; that leaves you only ninety francs for the month."
