

THE DAILY BEE COUNCIL BLUFFS.

MONDAY MORNING, DEC. 14. OFFICE: No. 12 Pearl Street.

MINOR MENTION.

Kiel's hotel has a telephone now. Reiter, the tailor, for winter goods. Don't forget the fireman's bill in Masonic hall to-morrow evening.

The temporary boiler that heats the new county jail will be ready to-day.

John Nicholson has bought the racing horse "Red Buck" who has a record of 1:45.

A large turnout is expected this evening at the citizens' meeting in Masonic hall.

The left leg of C. A. Larson, a Union Pacific switchman, has been fractured by a fall.

At the opera house next Friday evening the Bloomer school children are to give an entertainment.

A decision in the case of Dr. Cross is expected this term of the supreme court now in session at St. Louis.

The sheriff's of the different counties in Iowa are to hold a convention in Burlington on the 22d and 23d inst.

A. A. Parsons, the St. Paul harvester agent in this city, claims to have discovered a new and sure cure for hog cholera.

Since the cold weather has set in work on Indian creek has progressed admirably. The dirt being frozen is taken out in chunks.

The trains on nearly all the railroads entering this city have been late on arriving for a number of days past on account of the weather.

Mrs. W. W. Loomis and Mrs. S. Clarke will entertain the married ladies progressive club at the residence of W. W. Loomis on First avenue to-morrow evening.

George Parker who works with the Consolidated Tank Line company has had his right leg fractured by a Washburn train striking a pipe and knocking it against Parker.

The arrangements of the Council Bluffs paid fire department's mass ball to be held in Tompkins hall to-morrow evening are about completed and the boys are assured of success.

In the district court yesterday the trial of the case Mary C. Walker vs. C. R. L. & P. railway was commenced. The claim is for damages caused by the explosion of dynamite a few years ago.

The team of horses that strayed from J. P. Olson on Seventeenth avenue, on Saturday night, were found yesterday near Weston in a field by a man who knew the team. He brought them home to the city.

The special delivery system does not pay very well here. Last month the three boys who attend to the special delivery only made $15 in new work. One of them left and now the work will be attended to by the remaining two.

"Texas," the colored man who has been arrested, as was stated in the Bee yesterday, for stabbing a man named Finley, was brought up yesterday. His case was postponed till to-morrow, and Finley, who was so frightened that he walked all the way to Omaha, has been sent for to appear against "Texas."

An important meeting of citizens is called for to-morrow night in Masonic hall. The object is to make arrangements for meeting the committee expected from the city and talk over the proposed manufacturing boom. Council Bluffs should arouse itself. If there is not enough interest to have a rousing meeting, with plenty of talk, which costs nothing, there surely can be but little encouragement toward getting investments of money.

Try John Templeton's "Rose" cigar. Ladies and gents get a ticket to the grand drawing on January 1, with every 25 cents worth of goods purchased of Arthur Ledkovitz, 323 Broadway. The choicest candies, California fruits, nuts, cigars, etc., always on hand.

C. B. Jacquemin & Co., No. 27 Main street, take pleasure in announcing to the public that their new line of articles, ornamental, stylish and useful holiday goods, is complete in each and every department, and cordially invite everybody to visit their store, inspect their goods and compare prices. No trouble whatever to show goods.

Personal Paragraphs. E. L. Cutler of Moline was in the city yesterday. Rev. B. P. McMonomy has gone on a short visit to St. Louis. Simon Eisenman has returned from St. Louis where he has been purchasing holiday goods.

Mrs. John Stork, who has been confined to her home with diptheria, is again able to be out. Judge E. E. Aylosworth, who has been absent in New York attending the funeral of his sister, has returned home. Charles D. Harmon went out on the road yesterday to preach to the good people of the fact that his goods beat all competitors.

J. J. Vanderveer left yesterday morning for an extended trip west in the interest of his house, Messrs. Van Brunt, Thompson & Co. Flisley Burke, son of City Auditor Burke, who has been attending the supreme court in Des Moines, was in the city yesterday, and last evening left for his home in Orange City.

A. W. Staunro, of Buffalo, N. Y., is in the city and has been appointed city reporter for the K. G. Dun & Co. mercantile agency here, of which his son, O. S. Staunro, has lately become manager.

THE MAJOR'S UNERRING AIM

Successfully Punishing a Fellow-Confederate Who Threatens to Squelch. A GANG OF CROOKS FALL OUT. Division of their Thieving Spots Leads to a Bloody Shooting. The Victim at the Point of Death. Details of the Affair.

The bloody tragedy of yesterday. The tragedy at the Union Avenue hotel early yesterday morning was the theme of much talk yesterday. The outlines of the affair were given in yesterday's Bee, but many additional details of interest have since been learned.

Many visited the hotel yesterday, and yet to the casual questioner there was little new to be given. The trouble seems to have been of a personal nature between the members of a gang of confidence men. This gang numbers six, and is headed by the man who did the shooting. He is known as "The Major." He is about 40 years of age, of rather pleasing manners, has a smooth shaven face and is in the habit of carrying a cane. These fellows have been hanging about this part of the city for some time, doing their work in Omaha, Lincoln, Sioux City, and the various railroads. They are known to the police in each of these cities, by sight at least, and it seems strange that some effort has not been made to rid the country of them.

"The Major" has various aliases, among them being Jones, Williams and Benton. On Monday of last week he was arrested in Omaha on charges of larceny, and being a suspicious character. He there gave his name as Walter Benton. Justice Frayne, who has been his attorney, went over to Omaha and secured his discharge. It has been the habit of this gang to visit this city frequently, staying a few days and then disappearing. The police, at least some of the force, know a great deal of them by sight. "Why haven't you been run in them, and why haven't some of the victims reported?" "You're a fresh one. Why don't you know that thousands of dollars are lost every year by gambling by gambling being taken in and done up, and yet only once in a while there is any case which gets into the papers? They always do up suckers whom they keep from robbing, or get them out of town before they have a chance to roar. I tell you these fellows have been catching lots of suckers right around here."

It seems that Major Williams, as he is perhaps the best known, was engaged in a bad scrape in Sioux City a short time ago. A cattle man with a big roll was the victim. He was filled up, and not being able to get his money in any other way, the gang concluded to take it by force. While in a drunken condition he was beguiled by some pretext into going to a second part of the railway yards, and then "The Major" with some of his companions knocked him down and got the money. In the scuffle Williams got his foot caught in a frog and in his haste to get away he kicked it, and in this way hurt his foot. The accounts for the limp which has been noticeable of late in his walk. The man, Hughes, who was the victim of the affair, got his money, and he is now in the party who knocked down and robbed the cattle man, but he claimed that he was the one who "steered" the cattle man into the trap set for him. He was the one who put the major, and had it not been for his starting the scheme, the plunder could have been secured. For these services he claimed a part of the proceeds of the robbery. This was refused him, and in consequence he decided to give the whole thing away. This led to the fatal shooting. The plan to either

QUIT HIM OR KILL HIM seems to have been coolly premeditated. The plan appears to have been to lead Hughes into a quarrel and then shoot him, the chances being in favor of getting off on the ground of self-defense. "The Major" stopped at Fichtel's hotel Sunday evening, while Hughes was stopping at the Union Avenue hotel. "The Major" sent for a doctor to dress his wounded foot, and this part of the affair has been kept very quiet. The use of the wound being of such a nature that he of course was anxious to keep even the fact of having such a wound a secret. He was very anxious that some surgeon should be secured who could sew the wound well. "For," he said, "I have got to be in shape to do a big amount of walking to-night."

From this it appears that he had then in his mind the intention of shooting Hughes, and the probability that he might have had work to do. With two of his companions he went to the Union Avenue hotel, and there had a stormy talk with Hughes. He told Hughes everything that he could find in his voluminous vocabulary of obscenity and profanity. He seemed anxious for Hughes to strike him or to resent the insult by striking him. He went over to the Metropolitan house, across the street. George Gerspacher, one of the partners running the Union Avenue hotel, saw them in there, and one of them remarked to him that they were going over to Omaha on the dummy. He told them the dummy train was just ready to start, and they had to hurry. Then they admitted that they were not intending to go over the river. A short time after this they came again into the hotel office, and this time "The Major" insisted that when they left the hotel before Hughes had followed them out with the intention of assaulting him.

HOT WORDS, THEN SHOTS. This time words ran hot and fast, the party having been filling up with more firewater. Hughes was very quiet in comparison with the others, and said nothing back, but took the epithets as they came. He went into the washroom once to avoid further difficulty, but as the Major's companions followed him, he returned to just as the Major was making some threat as to what he could do with him. To this Hughes made an obscure reply, and "The Major" pulled a revolver and commenced shooting. There was a lively scattering of all in the room. Three shots were fired in quick succession. The night clerk, James O'Neill, hardly waited to hear the first one before he was bounding up the stairway calling for help. It was all over in less time than it takes to tell it. George Gerspacher grabbed "The Major" but there was quickly thrust aside and received one ball in his hand, the little finger of which was badly injured and the bone splintered. Hughes had fallen to the floor and was bleeding terribly. As "The Major" and one of his companions went out of the front door after the shooting, the other companion tried to get out through the washroom, but was grabbed by Gerspacher, who thought to hold him until the crowd could be had to let the fellow go, the three making good their escape.

There seems little doubt but that the other two were as knowing to the plot as "The Major" himself. When they entered the hotel for the last time, and "The Major" began abusing Hughes again, Gerspacher tried to induce one of "The Major's" companions to get him to stop such talk, but the fellow replied, "Let the old man talk. You needn't worry about him. He will take care of himself."

TOO MANY WOUNDS. The wounded man was placed on a cot in the office, and Dr. Macrae called. He found that Hughes had been dangerously wounded in two places. One ball had entered his hand, and the other struck him under the shoulder blade, and lodged against the spinal column. He at once pronounced the wounds fatal, and thought it was needless torture to probe for the balls. He was given, at the same time, some medicine to make him comfortable, and there he lay, visited by scores of curious lookers-on, until yesterday forenoon, when he was taken upstairs and placed in a private room. Soon after the shooting, when it seemed that he must soon die, a priest was sent for, and as he entered the room, the wounded man began at once his confession of sins, lumping them off with "The Major."

He had been guilty of everything in the catalogue except murder. "Yesterday morning Dr. Bellinger appeared on the scene. It was claimed that some of the wounded man's friends called him in. The poor man thus had the benefit, or the disadvantage, of having two different courses of treatment given him at the same time. Dr. Bellinger believed in a more radical method than did Dr. Macrae. He was for cutting out the bullets at once. He reasoned that the man could not live, if the bullets stayed there, and he might as well try the experiment of getting them out. He called over Dr. Gallbraith, Dr. Spaulding and Dr. Jackson, of Omaha, and yesterday afternoon proceeded to probe for the balls, and try to cut them out. He cut about three inches in the breast, got hold of the ball, and tried to pull it out, but the man was bleeding so terribly that the other doctors who had been against the use of the knife, protested against his trying this method further. They thought the man would bleed to death. The attempt was then abandoned. Dr. Bellinger declared, however, that he would resume the attempt this morning, if the man was still living.

Soon after these doctors had left the place Dr. Macrae came in to see how his patient was getting along. He was naturally indignant on learning that the physicians had been probing for the balls. The evident misunderstanding as to whose case it was did not apparently increase the chances of living, if he had any chance, and last evening he was lying in a dying condition.

WORDS OF THE DYING MAN. He was anxious enough to answer some questions. He still declared that his name was James Hughes, and that he had two brothers, Frank and Joe, who lived in Cairo. They have been informed by telegraph. When asked by Marshal Gunnella who shot him, he said Major Jones. He said his father was Major Jones before Sunday. He said he did not know either of the two other men, and did not seem inclined to betray any secrets.

Coroner Conell claims to have got a little more definite statement from him, to the effect that the quarrel was about some partnership matters, and the division of spoils.

Yesterday a boy and girl appeared at the county clerk's office, and with the greatest nonchalance asked for a marriage license. The clerk, who had been told that the boy had nearly taken away the breath of Clerk Shea. The boy claimed to have reached the age of 17 years, and the girl went him one better and said she was 18. They were dressed in the plainest clothing, by no means tidy, and they looked as far off in dress as they did in age for candidates for matrimony. The boy gave his name as Mowry and the girl said her name was Mary, and she lived with her aunt. Her father and mother were dead and she could not very well get their consent. She could get the consent of her aunt, though. The boy said his father was dead, but his mother would give her consent. They were sent away with a request to bring the necessary permits and this was thought to be the matter, but back they came, smiling and blooming, the boy having a note purporting to be signed by his mother, and the girl a like note signed by her aunt. The clerk was hard hearted and still could not see his way to grant marriage licenses to children. He refused this time peremptorily, and the girl tossed her head contemptuously, while the boy wanted to know why the clerk was so hard on them and his. He was informed that some responsible and disinterested party must first come to the office and file the necessary permits and affidavits. The lad and lass went away sad, but their supervisor Hardin, who stood watching the young couple as they departed, strengthened the position of the clerk by explaining that he knew the boy and the family. He said that the boy was now a dependent on the county, and that three other of his relations were alike unfortunate, and he thought it very wise not to allow the couple to engage to any very great extent. He understood that the boy had lately secured a lucrative position of $8 a month, and this enormous salary had doubtless turned his head toward matrimony.

An Unruly Prisoner Shot. There are in the county jail some very unruly prisoners, and Jaylor Shontz has his patience sorely tried. One of these is frequently visited in the grossest manner by some of the prisoners, and they improve every opportunity of making him bleed to bear for all connected with the jail. One such rascal, Henry Jones, went a little too far the other night. He refused to enter his cell when locking up time came. Not content with being bulky he began abusing the jailor, and finally the jailor threatened to shoot him if he did not behave himself. Jones swore at him worse than before and dared him to shoot, calling him all sorts of obscene names. Shontz at last in desperation fired his revolver to scare the fellow into submission, but as the ball went far from him he laughed and resumed his insulting remarks, dared him to shoot again, and still refused to submit to the rules. Shontz then shot again, this time sending a bullet through his foot, inflicting a rather painful but not serious wound. The fellow did not stop on the order of his going but went. Now order prevails again in the jail, the prisoners finding out that Shontz will shoot.

Meeting of the Fathers. The council last night spent one hour reading out the book minutes. They got as far as October 1, 1885. The council discussed the advisability of creating the office of board of public works. It was referred to a committee. A resolution was adopted for the appointment of a committee of three aldermen and three citizens to devise ways and means for establishing a city hospital. The committee appointed were Aldermen Myners, Bennett and Gessner and Messrs. Henry Eisenman, Charles Henrich and Thomas Officer. The petition of business men, asking the city to recognize the C. R. E. Anderson, as chief of a merchants' police force, was favorably received by the council and referred to the mayor. The claim of Mr. Doherty for damages to his opera house, for having been prohibited from a free license to December 1, 1887. The protest of some owners of corner lots against being assessed for paving on both streets was reported adversely by the city engineer. The report was concurred in by the council.

An ordinance was passed exempting from taxation for five years all manufacturing enterprises which shall locate in this city and invest a capital of not less than $10,000. The council then adjourned.
