ROMANCE OF THE RANGE.

A Wonderful Story of a Colorado Cowboy and His Sweetheart.

A Girl Who Follows Her Lover to the Plains Disguised as a Man—Courageous in His Defense She Yet Proves Herself a Woman.

"Talk about novels and romances, we have some things happening on the range sometimes that would make your newspaper stories look like a sick cow alongside of a healthy steer," said a cowboy who was in attendance at the late international convention at a Denver News reporter.

"You see our company's range is in northern Colorado and Northern New Mexico, and there are about forty of us in all. Some of us are young fellows like myself, but there are several who are much older, making them up together."

One day we went out on the plains, having heard that a number of cattle, who had drifted the winter before, had gotten down on the Arkansas some hundreds of miles from where they belonged, and determined to follow them.

Finally a big bully, belonging to the outfit, said he could discount Greenwood's score. He was called Gopher by the boys, and he was a real rascal.

"You think you are a dead shot, don't you?" "I think I can put a hole through you," said Gopher.

"You are not meet me behind the cottonwoods." "I'll meet you at any time," said Alf, with a mock bow.

THE RESCUER OF CAMERON.

The Valorous Deeds of an Austrian Nobleman in the Early Days of Texas.

The Heroic Rescue of a Belonged Colony From the Indians—The Romance of His Life.

A Waco (Tex.) correspondent, writing to the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, says: There is living in Waco to-day a venerable and unostentatious old gentleman, whose many days may be seen cautiously picking his way along the streets seeking for the sunshine which assists his feeble, but not less brightly, eyes.

After some delay and vicissitudes of various kinds Erath found employment as a surveyor, and was sent with a small party to the very heart of the then unknown wilderness about where Cameron county was since located.

Belonging to one of the families of the early days, Erath was a young man, and a romantic old nestled cozily at the foot of the Tyrolean Alps.

Chicago Herald: One of the common weaknesses of human nature is being nothing and so quickly brings out this particular weakness and causes it to stand forth like a boil on the nose as a few ounces of freewater poured into a glass of water will cause it to rise.
