How a Student at the State Medical School Met His Tuition Bill.

AN OLD GHOUL STORY REVIVED,

Motion for a New Trial in the Cole Miller Case-A Pointer on Smith's Latest Movements-Capital Mention.

FROM THE BEE'S LINCOLN BUREAU. Lincoln people will readily recall the excitement attendant upon the discovery of a stolen corpse last fall, and the investigation which followed, during which the instructors and professors of the medical school swore they knew nothing of how the subject got there. The BEE now has good reason to believe that the body was procured by a student at the school in pursuance of a contract with the faculty by which he was to furnish subjects in payment for his tuition. On the morning after the discovery this student, who for the present shall be nameless, told two or three intimate friends that he and a brother searcher after anatomical knowledge had put the body in the room, and described the whole transaction. Two days before, he said, having heard that an inmate of the hospital for the insane had died and was buried in the cemtery attached to the institution, they borrowed a team of horses and drove out there. Not knowing the exact location of the grave they inquired of an attendof the grave they inquired of an attendant, and on being asked what they wanted to know for, replied they were tombstone agents. This quieted the attendant, and the student and his partner, having in their mind's eye marked the spot, came back to town. Two days later they got a horse and wagon, and loading in the necessary tools, started out about 10 o'clock at night. They reached the cemetery atl right, but opened the wrong grave, and were afraid they had been misdirected. Finally they struck the right one, and when the box was reached the student's accomplice was so overright one, and when the box was reached the student's accomplice was so oversome by the odor that he nearly fainted, and was revived only by the use of stimulants. The body was brought to town, and driven up to the front of the dissecting room on Eleventh street. There one of the ghouls took it on his back and was carrying it up the stairs on the outside of the building when it slipped out of his grasp and rolled down to the sidewalk. The noise aroused an old man living there, who came to the window and looking down on the horrible scene fell back paralyzed with four scene, fell back paralyzed with fear. Together the student and his assistant boosted the corpse up the stairs and de-posited it in the room, well satisfied with deir night's work. The above is in brief the story as told by one of the participants in the affair. Being warned by his friends to keep still about it he became apprehensive, and to all questions bearing on the case after-ward entered a general denial. The fact remains, however, that on the night the grave was robbed this student and another man were seen by a lady to load another man were seen by a lady to load some shovels in a wagon, and subsequently he exhibited to various people a piece of human scalp which he said was taken from the same corpse. The BEE's informant has further signified his willingness, if necessary, to make affidavit to the matter as related.

A POINTER ON SMITH.

The counsel for the defendants in the The counsel for the defendants in the Cole vs Miller case have filed a motion for a new trial, which will probably be heard by Judge Dundy. They allege misconduct on the part of the jury, and various errors in the trial, which they think entitle them to a new hearing. In connection with this litigation a number of stories relative to the late lamented Loyal L. Smith, and his flight from Omaha, have come to light. One of the Omaha, have come to light. One of the most recent and best is that told by Mr. Rhodes, the financial agent for A. S. Gage Rhodes, the financial agent for A. S. Gage & Co., of Chicago, who was attending the trial as a witness. Mr. Rhodes says that before going to Omaha Smith had a love affair with a sporting woman at Albany, N. Y., a remarkably handsome brunette, of rich and eminently respectable family. After Smith had plucked his dupes and gone over into Canada to join the innumerable throng, he sent for this woman, who met him sent for this woman, who met him at Toronto, when they were married. Both are professedly anxious to reform and lead good lives. To do this they think it necessary to again become residents of the United States, or "God's country," so to speak, the moral atmosphere of the Dominion, laden as it is with the breath of so many crooked exiles, not being conducive to any lasting desire in the right direction. But the army of merchants whom Smith deluded into the belief that he was the Stewart of the west, stand ready to ery, "Give us our money, or go to jail!" And so Smith and his wife linger on the other side, while an attorney at Albany, acting for Mrs. Smith's family, is endeavoring to make a settlement with the creditors. The negotiations were begun a short time ago, and have not progressed much yet, most of those interested wishing to await the result of the trial before naming any the result of the trial before naming any basis of settlement. If the defendants won, Smith stock would go up. If they lost, it would go down, and twenty-five cents on the dollar would be an object, where in the former instance three times that amount would not be taken. The defendants have been beaten, but the principal ones are still full of fight, and will not listen to terms of compromise until cipal ones are still full of fight, and will not listen to terms of compromise until the case is fought to and determined by the courts of last resort. Mr. Rhodes, in figuring up Smith's indebtedness, said it was much larger than the record shows. Attachments to the mount of $125,000 were placed on the stock, and it is estimated that claims footing up $45,000 more were held by parties who realized that they were too late to protect themselves, and didn't want the world to know that they had been taken in and done for. that they had been taken in and done for BRIEF MENTION.

A party of Union Pacific officials took a run from Omaha to Lincoln Friday after-noon to test the working of the Boyer speed recorder, a new velocimeter which is said by railway men to "fill a long felt want." The machine consists of a log chain running from one of the axles to an apparatus in the ear which records on an apparatus in the ear which records on a strip of paper the number of miles traveled. The paper is ruled into spaces representing various periods of time, and being kept in motion, passing under the recording pencil, shows accurately the rate at which the train is moving. It will very likely be adopted on the Union Pacific.

The woman who gave the name of Mrs. Heintz was at once arraigned before Judge Stenberg and questioned, through an interpreter, as she could not speak a word of English. She denied having tried to kill her husband, although she acknowledged that she was angry at him because he did not provide sufficiently for her and her child. Heintz, who is a cobbler by trade, said that he had been out of work for some time, and had had nothing to eat for days, except what the Woman's Christian association had given him. When asked if his wife had tried to kill him, he answered emphatically, kill him, he answered emphatically, "no." The testimony of other witnesses, nowever, went to show that she had him nearly strangled with a heavy rope, and had not assistance arrived in time, he would have been sent over the dark di vide. In his anxiety to shield his wife Heintz denied that she ever ill treated him. He said that her mind was a trifle affected on account of a sister in the old country for whom she had long been worrying.

The judge released the woman with instructions, through the interpreter, to behave herself in the future. Her neighbors want her sent to the Lincoln institu-tion for the insane, but the judge thinks she is not so badly demented as to re-quire asylum treatment. STORIES OF GOUGH.

Amusing Experiences of the Popular Orator Related by Himself.

Philadelphia Times: The late John B. Gough told a story as well in private as in public. The following are remem-bered among some of the experiences he used to relate. "On one occasion," he said, "I had made an appointment in a several miles to fill it. On arriving I found no one to receive me. I asked a middle-aged rustic if he could tell me where I could find the president of the

"The amount did not exceed $1.50.

"'I don't want it,' I said.
"'Wall, I swaw! Yer don't want all that money!'

I consented, and shortly afterward began my other course of three lectures. At the termination of the second one a gentleman arose and said that as Mr. Gough had not been paid on the occasion of his previous visit to that town he suggested that a collec-tion be taken up for the purpose of re-munerating him. munerating him. "One of the most terrible scenes I ever witnessed throughout my forty years' career as a public speaker, and yet one with a very ludicrous side to it, oc-curred at Dr. Herron's church, the First Presbyterian, Pittsburg, in 1851. I was speaking to a densely-crowded house, when all of a sudden there was a terrific crash in the gallery. A frightful panic ensued. The people thought the gallery was falling and made a stampede to escape from the building. Some threw themselves from the gallery to the floor below. Others jumped from the floor below. Others jumped from the windows. In the midst of the confusion the stove was upset. Fortunately the fire in it was very low and no conflagra-tion followed, but the occurrence terrified the already frantic people. Above the din I could hear the stentorian tones of three or four powerful men in the front of the gallery, who seemed to be trying to quell the panic by shouting at the top of their voice, while they gesticulated wildly with their hands and arms. The fiddle! it was the fiddle, the fiddle. but what on earth a fiddle could have to do with it was more than I could make out. At length some good prother near the pulpit struck up From Greenland's ley Mountains.' Others joined in the familiar hymn and order and quiet were at length restored. The meeting did not last long, though, after that. When the audience had dispersed the floor was strewn with false hair, hairpins, hats, bonnets, over-shoes, gloves, skirts, canes, caps and wraps of all kinds, overcoats and every conceivable article of wearing apparel. A large cartload of these things was taken to the mayor's office things was taken to the mayor's office of the capture of the ca the next morning to await the claims of their owners. After the trouble was all over I learned that the crash which created the panic was caused by some man's stepping upon the big bass fiddle, which was at that time used in the choir and which, when not in requisition, was allowed to repose on the gallery floor. This was what the men in the gallery whom I heard shouting about the fiddle were trying to explain to the fright-crazed people below.

"While lecturing in England I had the misfortune to be introduced on one occasion by a gentleman who dropped his hs from their proper places and put them on where they had no business to be, and who, when he came to make his speech of introduction, suddenly remembered the scriptural story of Samsom having slain a thousand with the jaw-bone of an ass, and of being refreshed, when subsequently thirsty, by a stream of water from the dry bone. He introof water from the dry bone. He intro-duced me in the following terms: 'I take pleasure in introducing to you the horator of the hevening. 'E's come from the other side of the water and is going to speak to us on temperance—a very dry subject. But I am sure when you have heard him you will be reminded of the miracle of Samson being refreshed by a stream of water from the jawbone of an hass.

No other labor saving invention has so lessened drudgery or brain and hand, or saved auch a large percentage of dear labor.

Figure that it turns off but twice as much work in a given time as does the pen (it easily does three times as much) and it gives you several free hours daily as and interest on your-investment.
