The Mayor and Law and Order League Quarterly Over Officer Smith. END OF THE TROUBLE NOT YET.

Sad Death of the Daughter of a Prosperous Farmer—A Race Probable Between the Fitzgeralds and Thurstons.

FROM THE BEE'S LINCOLN BUREAU. Mayor Burr and Secretary Lewis of the Law and Order League... The charges against Smith, however, were not transgressions, of which he had repented and avoided reprobation.

A DREAMER OF DREAMS. James Bond had reached the maturo age of forty when the casual smile of a woman changed the whole tenor of his existence. He met her in Westbourne grove one autumn afternoon, and though she smiled not at him, but at an old crossing-sweeper who was thanking her with excessive volubility for a sixpence, yet her beautiful face was so charged with sweetness that there arose within him a new sensation which he could not define.

When the man in the white coat came to the door, he saw a woman who was very young and very beautiful. She had a sweet smile and a pair of eyes that were like stars. He had never seen her before, but he felt as if he had known her for years.

When she came back, she was very pale and her eyes were like dead stones. She told him that she had been to the doctor, but he had said that she was not sick. She said that she had been to the hospital, but they had not found anything wrong with her.

about 12 years old, and a likely, promising boy. BRIEF MENTION. The Geneva Building association, the promoters of which are J. M. Felberbrown, J. M. Fisher, T. Wilkins, W. S. Hoston and J. D. Spener, has been incorporated.

The doors of the state house are to be locked hereafter on Sundays, and spooning couples will have to seek some other trysting place. The statement made in the Bee some weeks ago that Mr. C. Bonnell had sold his property in this city and intended emigrating to some eastern town, was vigorously denied by that gentleman and his friends through the local press.

Miss May Young, of Portland, Me., who came to Lincoln a few days ago on a visit, will remain here and take a course of study at the state university. The house of Mrs. L. E. Brown, at 320 South Seventh street, was entered by burglars Saturday night, while the family were at church and riddled of a number of small articles.

Bond looked disappointed. But seeing a pair of gloves which had just been tried on he pounced upon them eagerly. What was this strange thrill that went through him as he felt the soft touch of a vanished hand? Sympathy? Surely he was traveling the road of knowledge.

Walking homeward through a back street, he met a number of them just as he was about to enter a door. They were engaged in tormenting a cat held firmly by a string round its neck. At another time Bond would have gone away by quietness, but he was different—why, he could not tell. Some causes are too subtle for analysis.

They turned and faced him, a dubious group ready to assail or flee, according as he showed the strength of his arms. "Why do you beat the unfortunate animal?" he pursued. "Cos it's mine," replied the red headed woman who held the string.

trath, this gaunt creature with the flaming eyes looked violent enough for anything. Bond, a general duffer, felt the police the proprietor of the shop, formerly nattered upon the scene. He was not going to have a tussle made there, he said, so Bond was hustled into the street.

Then, with the desperate courage which is perhaps most common in timid men, Bond lunged into the shop and asked the assistant her name. "You mean the lady who was looking at these gloves?" inquired the dapper youth, pausing in his task of returning them to the counter with a look of evident amusement at his question.

He was sitting at the open window, absently caressing the cat upon his lap, when she happened to pass by at the window she suddenly stopped and stared. Before he had recovered from his surprise she stretched out her arms and said to him: "Oh, my pussie! Nell, Nell, won't you come to me?"

When she came back, she was very pale and her eyes were like dead stones. She told him that she had been to the doctor, but he had said that she was not sick. She said that she had been to the hospital, but they had not found anything wrong with her.

The Missouri's Murky Bed. Its Periodic Changes Transfers Farms from One State to Another. Singular Vicissitudes of a Family and a River Bank Farm—From Nebraska to Iowa and Back Again.

Washington Republican: Whatever site is washed up on a shore of the old Missouri river being by late the owner of the shore. Sometimes a whole farm gradually changes hands by crossing the wicked river in solution. Then the surveyors put a little crook in the Missouri on the map and say that it has shifted its course.

When he was at home he complained that the Missouri was the crookedest and the dirtiest stream he had ever seen in creation, but when he paid a visit to New York he knocked a man down and jumped on his chest for denying that it was the most glorious water-way in the world.

When she came back, she was very pale and her eyes were like dead stones. She told him that she had been to the doctor, but he had said that she was not sick. She said that she had been to the hospital, but they had not found anything wrong with her.
