MINOR MENTION.

New spring goods at Reiter's. Permit to wed was yesterday given to Martin L. Lee and Minnie Kimball, both of this city.

The storm has interfered very little with the trains, the Union Pacific being the only one seriously delayed.

The city calaboose should be patched up at once, so that drunken men will not be in danger of falling out every time they lean against the wall.

John Hitchcock, father of the young man who was injured by tumbling into a well, has returned to his home in Modale, the son getting along well toward recovery. It is reported that Abe Stvers, who was injured by a house falling on him, is in quite a critical condition, his injuries being internal, and the final result difficult

They are gradually breaking in. One of the new policemen in trying to signal a brother officer by rapping upon a lamp-post, broke his billy into splinters. He forgot that it was not a prisoner's head was thumping. Frank Levine, who has as large a collection of old coin as any one in this part of the country, added greatly to it the other day by the receipt of a number of specimens from the east. Among them was a silver dollar, American, bearing

Chief Matthews, of the police force, has his vest decorated with a gold star, a beauty, the gift of Harry Birkinbine, the engineer of the water works. Council Bluffs never had a chief who was more worthy of wearing such a star. One of the little ones at the Home of the Friendless was buried yesterday. Much sympathy and generosity was shown by a number of citizens in ar-ranging for the funeral, and the services were very tender and impressive.

The new city council starts in well.

They have not had but one meeting, and do not propose to meet again until the regular meeting next Monday night.

They seem to believe in grinding out a lot of business when they do meet, rather than keep the mill grinding slowly and putting small batches in the hopper.

The case of Leabner as the Chicago &

The case of Leehnan vs the Chicago & Northwestern Railway company came to an end in the United States court yes-terday, the jury returning a verdict for the plaintiff, fixing his damages at $700. In this suit heavy damages were claimed by the plaintiff on account of little his son being killed by the ears at Dunlap.

The funeral of William Lacy was held yesterday morning, and was very largely attended. The Catholic church was filled to its utmost capacity, and there was a very long line of carriages filled with friends who followed the remains to their last resting place. Father Healy gave a very sympathetic address.

The county treasurer has a pet crow, which attracts the attention of visitors to that office, and helps to make it cheerful for the fellow who has to turn both pockets wrong side out to get enough to pay his taxes. A cheery sort of a bird to have around such a place, and it brightens the gloom greatly.

War has opened on the saloons which are not complying with the requirement to close Sunday. Last week one information was filed against John Nicholson, and yesterday informations were filed against Peter Bechtele and Charles Bargmsen. The mayor evidently intends to have the order obeyed or make trouble. Henry Paschel, E. Rosecrans and J. W.

Morse are sitting as a board of appraisers to fix the damages claimed by J. M. Phillips on account of a change of grade near his property on Bancroft street. The attorneys were yesterday making arguments and examining witnesses, so that proceedings took quite a courtly form, and the three well known citizens were sitting in bane, as dignified as a supreme court.

One of the tramps at work on the street was heard counselling with a fellow in the chain gang as to the advisability of making a break to get away. "I don't mind their shooting, for they wouldn't aim to hit anyway, but I'm afraid the cops would blow their whistles. I'd rather they'd shoot than blow those whistles, for when the whistle sounds everybody knows we are running away.'

Charles Stubbens was yesterday fined for getting crazy drunk and shooting off his revolver. The fellow whom Charles in his wrath proposed to use as a target was not a bit afraid. He had a policy in the Burial Insurance company, of which the fleet-footed Pierce was the agent. If he had been killed the company would have to give him a $100 funeral or go back

The funeral of the late George F. Smith is to be held this afternoon at 1:30 o'clock at the family residence near the water works. The services will be under the auspices of the Odd Fellows, of which order he was a member. Having been an old soldier the veterans are requested to join the procession at Odd Fellows hall, and show due respect to the fallen comrade. The engine house of the water works has been draped in respect for him, and the employes of the company will attend the funeral in a body, and the offices of the company, as well as the ofoffices of the company, as well as the of-fice of the New York Plumbing company, will remain closed during the hours of

A SPICY CHAT ABOUT MEXICO.

The Way They Start the Cumbersome Stages of Our Sister Republic-The News of Yesterday Told Briefly.

Back From Mexico.

Colonel Sapp and Hon. Geo. F. Wright lately returned from an extended trip through Mexico, where they found many matters to interest them and their friends. Mr. Wright was chatting with a little group of friends yesterday, telling some of his experiences.

"You ought to see the way they start off "You ought to see the way they start off a stage there. They have a stage which is as heavy as a sleeping ear and they hitch a little pair of mules onto the front of this, and then they put on in front of them six more mules, all abreast, and four more ahead of them, abreast, and then two more as leaders. They have about as many men to hitch up as there are mules, and they keep fooling around, and making the head mules believe that they are not hitched up until they get all ready, they tell you to get in, the driver gathers up all the reins, and then the last tug is hitched and away you go. For the first mile it means business. They the first mile it means business. They always go on the jump, and are sure to strike all the stones. In fact they seem to take pains to pick out some stony place to start. After the first mile it is all right, and they can stop and start up at will. It's the fashion of the country in making all starts. A fellow there don't think a horse is any good at all unless it takes fifteen minutes to get on his back, and the horse kicks and bucks enough to throw any ordinary man off."

"How did you enjoy the meals served in Mexico?".
"Horrible! The only clean thing you can get is a boiled egg with the shell still on. Garlie is stuffed into every dish, and in all sorts of ways. Take rice for instance. They are bent on putting any-thing into rice so it won't taste like rice It don't make much difference what they can get, so long as they get something to spoil the taste of it. Coffee? You ought to see it. It is as black as a coffin and as thick as pudding, and they drink it grounds and all. We drank it until it made us sick, and after that had to con-fine ourselves to milk and water." fine ourselves to milk and water.

"Are there not some signs of progress and improvement?" "They are few. You should see them plow. They have a little bit of a one-handled affair which just tickles the ground and it does just as well, for the grain will grow if it only has a little water. They fasten the yoke to the horns of the oxen instead of about their necks. There was an Englishman there who owned a big ranche, and he was bound that they should use the yokes as they are used in this country. He saw that the oxen were yoked himself, and worked his way from one end of his ranche to the other, and when he came back the next day he found every blessed one of them had taken off the yokes as soon as his back was turned, and had fastened them onto the horns. The only way he could get his help to use the yokes right was to threaten them. In starting oxen there is a startling exception in the rule as generally. It takes them until noon to start a yoke of oxen. And then their plows. There are some American plows to be found there. There were a ot of regular plows introduced there, but the only way they could get these fellows to use them was by sawing off one handle. Then they thought they were better. You see they want one hand to erack the whip with. Now American plows are made for them-little bits of things, like a boy's plow, with one handle and a long light beam, reaching way up so as to fasten to the horns of the

Randall Heard From.

At last tidings have been received from W. C. Randall, the insurance agent who, about a month ago, was reported as dying suddenly in St. Louis. The report was found to be false, and there was a conjecture that he had got on a big spree, or had some other like reason for absenting himself from his office here. Numerous creditors appeared, the office was siezed, and there was a sensational revelation of affairs, causing much talk. Nothing has been heard of his whereabouts since, until the return from Kansas of Mr. E. L. Shugart and Mr. I. N. Flickinger, who had been called into that state to look after some land business. In going from Saline to Aberdeen they were surprised to find Randall on the train. He claimed to have heard nothing before about the sensation which his disappearance from he city had caused, and appeared very indignant at the reports afloat, and claimed that he should return here by the 1st of April and vindicate his honor and reputation. He claimed that the com-pany had not used him right. He was not feeling well, and felt that he must have a change and rest. Consequently, ie sent word to the general office to have them send a man here to take his place for sixty days. He claimed that he had written agreements with the company for fitting up the offices here, and incurring other debts, which the company had refused to pay, on the grounds that they had never authorized Randall to contract them. When bantered about the fact that his obituary had been written up here on the strength of the telegram an-nouncing his death, he had little to say explanatory of it, except that it was all a mistake about his having died, and he did seem to be a lively corpse. He said he was traveling on the road now, and when asked for whom he said, "Oh, a friend of mine." He reassured the Council Bluffs twain that he should be in this city by the 1st of April to set matters right here, and to show the baseness of the reports circulating about him. He gave his present address as Kansas City. Those here who want to see him may therefore expect him to call on them April 1, an appropriate date to set.

M'CULLOUGH AND BOOTH. Fred Warde's Opinion of the Two

Great Actors. New York Mail and Express: A reporter for the Mail and Express: A re-porter for the Mail and Express met Fred Warde the other day. Mr. Warde said it was the first time he had played in New York City as a star, and he was highly pleased at his success. For five years he had been traveling about the country, gradually working toward New York, and to be received so kindly by the audi-ence was to him most gratifying.

ence was to him most gratifying.

"You have been in this country a long time now, Mr. Warde?"

"Since 1874. I was born in the south of England and educated at the city of London schools. On coming to this country I was engaged at Booth's theatre, and played a character first in a drama of Boucleault called Belle Lamar. The of Boucleault camed bene also a mem-late John McCullough was also a member of the company at the time. Either during the last few months in 1874 or early in 1875, I supported the late Charlotte Cushman, and played Macduft in Macbeth. I was in the original cast of Julius Cæsar at Booth's, and resigned from that company because I was allotted the part of Julius Cæsar. I then joined John McCullough's company and played Iago to his Othello and Marc Antony to his Julius Cæsar. It is to John McCullough that I owe my present position. He advised me to star five years tion. He advised me to star five years ago, and I took his advice. There never age, and I took his advice. There never was a more thorough gentleman or kind-hearted man than McCullough. Why, sir, I have known him to slip off the stage when he was disengaged, enter a box and lead the applause for some one who deserved approbation. Poor John! We were great friends; he was a great actor.

"You must be well acquainted with Mr. Booth?"

"I am, sir, and our close acquaintance grew from our fondness for pipes. Mr. Booth is very reserved, modest and retiring. He is fond of his pipe. I as an Englishman am also fond of a pipe, and often when treveling together we would retire to the baggage-car and light our pipes, and then, somehow or other, over that sociable pipe we would get to study-ing and talking until we became fast friends."

There is a popular idea that Mr. Booth does not favor any good actor being in his company, because he is of a very jealous disposition."

"That is altogether false. There is not a spark of jealousy in Mr. Booth, and he has been supported by men who are now starring all over the country. John McCullough, Lawrence Barrett, Eben Plympton and hosts of others have been in his company, and now he has the Boston Museum Company with him. Mr. Booth is such a splendid actor that a good man will fall altogether in the shade by his side."

OHIO'S RICHEST CITIZEN.

His name is David Sinton-His Pe culiarities of Person and Mind. Cincinnati Enquirer: Who is it? It is David Sinton, Ohio's richest man, who handles more ready cash than any of the eighteen or twenty nullionaires or mil ionaire estates in our midst. His wealth is estimated at from $10,000,000 to $12,000, 000, and yet this is the man who lately gave $75,000 to the Art Museum, by which he achieved a national reputation second only to the late Reuben Springer and Charles W. West. That was not his only charity, for a few years ago he gave the Bethel $100,000 and to the Young Mens' Christian Association $33,000. What a strange mingling of personal parsimony and public charity!

He is of Scotch-Irish descent and was born in the Belfast district, so famous for its linens. At the age of three he came to America, his parents settling at Pittsburg. There the boy grew up about the huge foundries and naturally began to think that fortunes were made in iron. His first business venture was a clerkshir in a country store at a salary of $4 a month. Drifting down the Ohio river he stops at the furnaces of the Hanging Rock region and soon secures a clerk ship, is not long in becoming manager and at last half owner. His next venture was in Cincinnati, where he opened an iron store for furnishing the products of the furnaces to buyers.

There are many anecdotes of his pe-culiar traits. Manager Page, of the Western Union, was one of the few who ever got the best of the old man. It was in this way: Some time since there was passed a city ordinance compelling all owners of property to put on smoke con-sumers. Among the first who came to the front with smoke consumers was David Sinton, who had invented a device that he claimed filled the bill. He had it put on a building that he owns, and when in a few days Page received notice to put one on the Western Union building, he addressed Sinton a note. The millionaire answered in person, went down stairs sat on an old box and figured up the cost of the affair and reported to Page. "All right, Mr. Sinton; we'll sign a contract." "Agreed." One feature of Mr. Sinton's consumer was that it consisted of two arches made of firebrick, which Mr. Page believed would come down from the force of the flames. Sinton insisted they would not, and if they did, agreed to put them up. In went the consumer, and in three months' time down caved the arch. Sinton was notified that his arch had fallen. He called, and insisted that the fireman had pulled it down. This the fireman-an old em down. This the fireman—an old employe—denied, and Sinton then said, well it will cost you $30 to put up another arch with my workmen and under my direction: "Oh, no," replied Page; "I have a contract with you, Mr. Sinton, and as you are a responsible man, if you don't have your workmen there by 10 o'clock to-morrow then I will bring suit." The workmen began at work at 7 o'clock the next morning; but the consumer was no good, and finally had to be taken out. Mr. Sinton is a stickler for blue blood, and glories in his humble origin. It is his greatest pride to tell how he has arisen by his own exertions from the

How Mr. Cable Began to Write. Philadelp ia Times: Mr. Cable says that, though he always had an inward conviction that he could be a writer, circumstances seemed to force him into commercial pursuits and for several years he was a chief clerk to a large firm in New Orleans, beside holding a prom-inent position in the cotton exchange of that city. For a time he wrote in ama-teurish way for several local papers and teurish way for several local papers and was finally engaged to write a column every week for the Sunday edition of the New Orleans Picayune. When that paper changed hands he was assigned to write a series of articles giving a history of all the religious and charitable institutions of the city. To do that he had to read the history of New Orleans, which he found to be treasing that of Louisfana. He was so charmed with the romances interwoven with that history that he then resolved to write romances interwoven with that history that he then resolved to write stories of the early Creole days. For an entire year he read all that he could find pertaining to the subject without putting pen to paper, meanwhile retaining his clerical position. It is now about four years since he gave up commercial pursuits to devote himself wholly to literature. He was first led to think of going upon the platform to read selections from ture. He was first led to think of going upon the platform to read selections from his own works by his success in making an appeal to the congregation of a Presbyterian church, of which he was a member, to pay off an old debt. Prior to that time he had always been very timid about letting his voice be heard in public, but his address to the church people had such a remarkable effect—the total had such a remarkable effect—the total amount of the debt, which had been hauging over them for years, being promptly subscribed within a few minutes after he had finished—that he took some lessons in alcention and essayed to some lessons in clocution and essayed to give public readin rom his own works, with what success and the world knows. Postmaster Cong. F, of Washington, D. C., was promptly cured by Red Star Cough Cure.

The average salary of the Methodist preachers of the Baltimore conference is $785 a year. Sixty preachers, some of them married, receive less than this amounts to, and one receives only $160.

Incident of the Seligman-Wormser

Wedding.

New York Letter Cleveland Plain
Dealer: A young and enterprising Hebrew stock broker saw a large square envelope among the wedding presents with the legend "From father to Julia." Most people would have felt—some delicacy in investigating the package, but not with this young man. He appeared after the wedding at Delmonico's cafe and stated that Mr. Wormser had given his daughter $131,000 in Lake Shore firsts.

"How do you know?" he was asked.
"Because I opened the envelope and counted the bonds," was the reply.
"Were they not afraid to allow you to "Oh, no; there were two detectives watching me and, besides, the bonds were all in the bride's name." As Lake Shore firsts are selling at 1314 the envelope must have contained one hundred $1,000 bonds and the counting process must have been somewhat pro longed.
