Smith's Change of Mind.

On the 5th of last March, the supreme court of this state rendered by means of a jury, a decision in the celebrated case prowing out of Loyal L. Smith's peculiar manner of doing business. In that suit, Lewis Cole sought to recover the whole of the Smith stock, which had been assigned to him by his father-in-law, Haiman Lowey, who in turn, had purchased it from Smith, as alleged, for $40,000.

The terms of the alleged purchase were transaction at all. He would take the $10,000 on six months' time, and $25,000 which were to be paid in thirty-five or sixty days, the remainder to depend upon the manner in which Lowey came out with his creditors. Although Smith was threatened with impending disgrace, and desired at least $75,000, and grace, and desired at least $75,000, and that in cash, for his stock, he, nevertheless, was compelled to accept not only Lowey's price but also his terms. Nearly one year has clapsed since the negotiations leading to the transfer were completed, and during all this time, Smith from his exile beyond the border, has waited in vain for the first payment of $10,000 on the transaction. He has grown weary with this waiting, and becoming weary with this waiting, and becoming disgusted over the manner in which he himself has been victimized, comes into court through an affidavit by his attorney, and discloses the hidden history of his sale to Lowey. From this it appears that Smith received from Lowey for his store and stock, but $7,000, and that $7,000 belonged to himself. As he before intimated, the cost of the transfer was agreed upon. It was further covenanted that possession should be given Lowey Saturday night, and that the whole affair should be kept quiet until the following Monday morning, to enable Smith to get well on his way to Canada. On the night in question, after the close of business, it was agreed that the notes for $10,000 and $27,000 should be handed over to Smith, and in return for that the latter was to give a bill of sale executed and delivered in the presence of Fuller, Morse and Shibley as witnesses, so that it might be duly attested in court.

Shortly before this, it happened that Smith had about $7,000 in Chicago exchange which he wanted cashed. Lowey change which he wanted cashed. Lowey at the time was about to go to Chicago, and was requested by Smith to take the exchange and return with it in money. This he did and on his return handed to Smith the $7,000 he had got on the latter's bills. Carrying out his design of not paying cash for the stock, Lowey conceives the scheme and successfully carries it out also, of inducing Smith to allow him to use his (Smith's) money to pay him (Smith) for his stock. Accordingly Lowey secures temporary possession of the $7,000 cash, marks it $10,000 and hands it to Smith in part payment of the transaction. As another part of the job, Lowey was, by means of letters of credit to secure temporarily, $20,000 which was also to go into Smith's $20,000 which was also to go into Smith's hands, but which, as soon as the game was over, was to pass back immediately to the hands of Cole, Lowey's son-in-law. Then comes Lowey's note for $10,000, which made up the $40,000, pur-chase money. Singular to relate, Smith agreed to and kept his part of the agree-

The note, the $20,000 in cash, and the $7,000 which belonged to Smith himself, and which were intentionally marked in bulk to represent $10,000, were all handed over to Smith. The transaction took place in Smith's store on Saturday evening, June 27th, 1885, the night Smith made his escape. It was followed by the transfer to Lowey of the bill of sale of the goods and the outstanding accounts of the house. The whole transactions of the sale of tion is sworn to by Smith, as also his bookkeeper, Fuller, who is at present sojourning in Ontorio, Canada. The transer over, Smith swears that he went to the Paxton house, saw Cole and still further kept his a reement by hand ing to the former, the $20,000 which he had as a blind received from Lowey. After a short delay, he further swears he goes to Lowey's room at the same hotel. By a preconcerted arrangement, Fuller, as he swears, follows Smith to the door of Lowey's room, which Loyal L. purposely leaves ajar that Fuller may hear the conversation in the the conversation in the apartment. Lowey informs Smith, the latter swears, and is sustained by an affidavit of Fuller's, that Cole had received the $20,000 as agreed upon. Lowey further promises to stand by his agreement with Smith in every respect. This is the iron which burns into Smith's soul. Lowey, he claims, has not complied with one feature of the understanding, the unfortunate part of which is that Smith did not received. not receive one penny for his $150,000 stocκ of goods. He claims now to be actuated only by the desire to have his creditors receive the payment of their claims against him. He also claims, if the case be reopened, to testify either by deposition or in person, if called upon to Another affidavit filed with those of Another affidavit filed with those of Smith and Fuller in the United States court is that of Huntington R. Kenyon, of Wayne county, Michigan. He swears to having seen Lowey in Chicago, and that when he told him that Smith was anxious to have his $49,000 paid, Lowey remarked that Smith's story was correct, and said that he had intended to pay the $25,000 out of the first sale of the stock. 25,000 out of the first sale of the stock and to have paid the note long before due, but that the creditors had attached the stock and it had already cost him $10,000 for the litigation, and, under the circumstances, he would not advace a cent until the case had been tried and settled.

COUNTERFEITERS CORRALLED. The Police Pounce Upon a Nest of

"Shovers of the Queer." The city and federal officials succeeded Saturday in unearthing the nest of a gang of counterfeiters who have been operating in Omaha for weeks past. Only one arrest has so far been made but that is an important one, and has served to throw considerable light upon a mystery which the government, officials have been trying to work out for months

About 6 o'clock Saturday Sergeant Matza, of the police force, happened into Bauer's saloon, at the corner of Thirteenth and Jones. While he was in that place, enjoying a glass or two of beer, a tough looking individual sauntered in, ordered a drink, and gave in payment a dollar which the sharp eve of the bartender discovered to be bogus. Matza at once hurried after the man and placed him under arrest. He protested that the coin had been given to him in change, and that he did not know that it was not gennine. Nevertheless, he was locked up to await trial. The follow gave his name as

In the meantime a United States detective who heard of Runkles' arrest, and who had been working up the very same case, concluded that this fellow was one of the gang which he was trying to run to the earth. Accordingly after consultation with the city authorities, he concluded to serve out a search warrant to look through Runkles' house, one of the Ainscow shanties, 1305 Jones street. Captain Cormick, Officer Whalen and the United States detective went down to the place, after having procured the warrant before U, S. Commissioner Anderson and knocked for admittance. At first there was no response, but finally the door swung open after repeated rapping, and the officers stepped in. They were greeted by a young woman apparently not over 20 or 21 years of age, who said that her name was Mrs. John Runkle. She timidly inquired what the officers wanted, and, upon being told that Lowey would put no money into the that they wanted to search house, appeared to be very bill of sale of the stock, the outstanding | much frightened. She said that she knew nothing of how the stuff came there, and never suspected that her husband was implicated in counterfeiting operations. "I have been married to him now five years," she sobbed, "and I never knew him to do anything of that sort before." Nevertheless the police believe that she was fully cognizant of her husband's connection with the counterfeiting gang, and that she is not quite so innocent as she pretends to be.

The coins which have been so far found are splendid imitations of the genuine, and are pronounced by the federal detectives to be some of the most dangerous counterfeits afloat. The police are engaged in tracing out further particulars, and some startting disclosures are expected before morning. This place on Jones street has been operating about a month, those who are concerned having come over from the Bluffs.

Runkles, the man arrested, is, as before intimated, a hard-looking customer. He stated tol a reporter Saturday that he did not know the money was bogus, and that he had nothing to do with the manufacture of counterfeit coin. In the afternoon, however, after the officers had raided his house, he declined to talk. "I have got a lawyer," he declared, "and my case is in his hands."

Business Establishments From All Parts of the Country-A Big One From Peoria, Illinois -Other Changes.

The demand for large business blocks blocks that are planned for construction the coming season will not be sufficient to meet the wants of the new business houses that have already arranged to come to Omaha this year Almost daily word is received of the decision of some establishment of importance to locate in this city. The latest important addition to the whole sale interests of the city is that of Sloan, Johnson & Co, of Peoria, III., who will remove their wholesale grocery business to this city next week. This firm is one of the largest of southern Illinois and comes

Z. T. Lindsey & Co., of Council Bluffs, the largest exclusive wholesale rubber house in the west will occupy the Brown building, at the corner of Fourteenth and December after Line 1.

For several days past three representa-tives of the leading wholesale houses in Keokuk, Iowa, have been in the city in close consultation with a number of our leading business men and it is understood that they contemplate a removal to this city. The gentlemen are: Mr. Irwin, of the wholesale dry goods house of Irwin, Phillips & Co.; Mr. Huiskamp of the boot and shoe jobbing firm of Huiskamp Bros., and Mr. Stafford, of Stafford & Richards wholesalers ford, of Stafford & Richards wholesalers of heavy hardware, iron and wagon stock. These gentlemen have been making a study of the city's advantages as a jobbing center and are very desirous of locating here. They returned home yesterday and will decide at an early date whether they will come here or not.

Smatler establishments are removing to the city almost daily from the surrounding country towns, taxing the city's store room capacity to its utmost.

There is too much centralization; one man fills almost every office. The country is now governed by the Manchoo people, who formerly lived outside the great wall, but who sided with one of the factions in a civil strife and then jumped into power themselves. The great wall was built before Christ, and as it exists is not such as when originally constructed, because it has Christ, and as it exists is not such as when originally constructed, because it has been subjected to many repairs. The great famine of 1878 enabled the missionaries to collect money for the relief of the starving. It was distributed and, although millions of people died, thousands were saved. By this assistance the missionaries popularized themselves and paved the way to success. AMUSEMENTS.

MIXED PICKLES. Joe Polk, in his new comedy of "Mixed Pickles," has made one of the greatest artistic successes New York has seen for years. The usually captious crities of the metropolis have given it almost unstinted praise for the many new ideas it contains, the bright lines and witty sayings with which it abounds and for its general cleanliness of plot and dialogue. In these days of free translations from the French, when double entendre is mistaken for wit, it certainly is a great satisfaction to feel that the ladies of the family can witness a thoroughly enjoyable — indeed, an uproariously funny—comedy without the danger of having their sense of propriety shocked by some coarse joke, only calculated to please the groundlings. This play will be presented at Boyd's opera house next Tuesday and Wednesday evenings.

Saved a Drowning Boy.

Yesterday, a number of young lads were playing on the river bank near the smelting works when one of them, a boy about 12 years of age, fell into the water. The current bore him rapidly from the bank. Encumbered by his, clothing the boy was dragged under the water and would have been drowned at once had he not struck a floating log. He seized this, but the rotary motion of the log prevented him from getting a good hold upon it, and he sank the second time. Just as he was sinking for the third time, completely exhausted, Mr. Al. Rothery, who was attracted by the cries of the who was attracted by the cries of the drowning lad's companions, jumped into the river and seized the boy by the hair. Mr. Rothery then got hold of the log and held the boy up until both were rescued by a boatman who happened to be near. It was a close call for the boy, whose life was doubtless saved by Mr. Rothery's prompt action.
