Murder of Rev. G. C. Haddock.

"It is a bad blow to the saloon business."

Such was the general comment heard about town here yesterday in regard to the telegraphic news in the Bee that Rev. G. C. Haddock, of Sioux City, had been shot down in the streets like a dog.

Although there is here a strong anti-prohibition feeling, and the saloons are allowed to run open despite the state law, there appears no one bold enough to attempt to justify the assassination.

The saloon men themselves are free in their expressions of condemnation of the act. Among the Methodists of the state Rev. Mr. Haddock was known as one of the strongest and most fearless leaders.

That denomination has been very stoutly tied to the prohibition cause, and as it is probably the leading denomination in this state, so far as members are concerned and its power in the struggle is felt.

Now that one of its leaders is thus shot down in cold blood, the zeal of that denomination will be redoubled, and a fiercer fight than ever will be waged.

The writer knew Mr. Haddock for many years. He was a man of marked individuality, a strong man, a natural leader. He was very aggressive, and loved a contest of any sort.

As one long ago said of him, "He was a man with the heart of an eagle and the tongue of a serpent." He entered the law instead of the pulpit, he would have doubtless become even more widely known, for in any contest of logic, and struggle of reason, he was almost a giant.

As a speaker, he was one of the most eloquent and forcible in the state. Of imposing presence, fine physical appearance, full, ringing voice, a close reasoner, and with enough of the emotional to inspire his auditors, and a sufficient variety of practical illustrations to catch the attention of all, his public addresses and sermons were far above those of the average man.

With all his aggressiveness, his boldness of speech, and fearlessness of utterance, he had a great and tender heart. Generous to a fault, no man could be quicker touched with a just cause for sympathy than he was.

He was a man who would not be an unfortunate, even though that unfortunate had been an enemy. He made bitter enemies, but his friendships were equally strong.

There was nothing vindictive about him, and he was always ready to forgive when the fight was over as he was to enter into the fight.

For years he has been a radical prohibitionist. Long before the agitation reached this state he was urging it in Wisconsin, where he was then living. In that state he was more widely known even than in Iowa.

About ten years ago he was invited by the then hopeless minority of temperance people in the little town in northern Wisconsin, to deliver a series of temperance addresses.

He accepted the invitation, and as usual stirred the little town to its utmost limits. He had the question in the way that with his make-up was possible for him, without gloves, and he freed his mind on the question.

Many sharp, cutting things and arousing the bitter opposition. After one of these addresses, while returning to his room, he was brutally assaulted by three men, and had a bloody struggle with them.

He was a strong man physically, and then was in his prime, so that his assailants did not get off without receiving some good blows as they grappled, but the combined assault upon him was too much and he was left for dead.

His injuries did not prove fatal, however, and when he sufficiently recovered to be able to stand on his feet, he declared his intention of returning to the town, and speaking again there.

there early, and a basket of lunch will be very pleasant and help pass the time in case of delay on account of the breeze. The judges will be Messrs. J. Evans, E. H. O'Neil and C. F. Friedmann.

All the comforts of high-priced hotels at the Pacific house, and a saving of 50c to $1 a day. Try it.

Play Out the Cards.

Considerable feeling is being aroused about the posting up of cards on private residences announcing to the world that there is scarlet fever within.

There have been few such cases, but the few have caused no little disturbance. There is no epidemic of this or any other disease in Council Bluffs, and hence the scare caused by a glimpse of one of the cards is unnecessary.

There is complaint made, also, that the cards are posted up where there is no occasion for them. One family is having published to the world, from the front of its residence, that there is scarlet fever within, when they say that all there is to start such a line and cry is that one of the little children had a mild attack of scarletina.

After the child was up and about, apparently as well as ever, the card was posted up with the threat that if taken down within thirty-five days the offender would be fined. The family has the assurance of the physician that there is no further danger, except to those who tear down the offensive card.

No one is sick in the house, and no one under treatment, yet the card must stay as posted. The countryman who has been selling vegetables to the family has caught sight of it, and hurried away, and with doubtful tell, the surrounding country that Council Bluffs is having an epidemic of scarlet fever.

Friends as well shun the house, and the family is placed in exile for over a month. Other such instances are cited, so that it seems that the few cases that are reported are posted up at all are such as to require no such "give away" on the city.

The authorities are strong in their assertions that the rules of the board of health demand that such cards be posted up. They assert that they are doing simply their duty under the law, and if they did not attend to this the city would be liable for any damages.

It seems that some grave has been made somewhere, though, if the hated cards are not put up until after the patients are recovered, it seems that they needlessly hurt Council Bluffs, and certainly hurt the persons directly interested, at the adjacent property.

There was any epidemic in the city, requiring heroic measures, the cause of complaint would not seem so strong. As there is no such epidemic, and no apparent danger, the few cards give the city credit of advertising which is far from desirable.

Was It a Mistake?

In the superior court yesterday some affidavits were filed in justification of young White's assault upon J. Q. Anderson. The affidavits were to the effect that White had only been informed on the day of the assault that Anderson had insulted his sister some time before. He was ignorant, and going to Anderson's office sought an explanation, and being treated with disdain, thumped him in the heat of passion.

The affidavit of the sister was filed, giving the details of the insult offered her. She claims that Anderson came to her room, and that the insult was such that there could be no mistake about it. Instead of taking the child, whom he claims to have come after, he left the room without her. The attorney for Mr. Anderson looked up the morning to file affidavits in rebuttal.

These affidavits will be to the effect that the whole matter was a mistake, and that also, that she sought to see to the payment of Anderson's bond for the day of the alleged insult. Also that she informed a neighbor the next day after the sensational occurrence, that the matter had been satisfactorily explained to her.

The affidavits on both sides set out in figures in the case beyond tending to enlighten the mind of the judge as to whether a severe or light penalty should be fixed upon White.

Plucking Her Doves.

Jennie Palmer, who was arrested for running away with mortgaged property, was yesterday acquitted by Justice Schurz. She with the other two lady boarders at Stella Long's gave chattel mortgages on their clothing to satisfy the demands of the landlady.

They were after this they clumped from the house in the night, and she went to Belle Clover's, taking her clothing with her. Then Miss Long called her to be arrested, and sent an officer to get her up all her clothing. Even the dress which the girl had on her back was stripped from her.

It seems that getting possession of all the clothing owned by the girl was not enough, and that she was imprisoned until she could satisfy the landlady. As the goods had not been taken out of the city, and no attempt to dispose of them or secrete them, the girl was released.

never will come again." Then, with gun in hand he silently crept the projecting legs of the negro's corner of the cabin, and creeping across the roof, peeped over the edge above the place place where the sheep was hung.

Something appeared to be moving below in the darkness. At the same time, he blazed away. The shot scattered and evidently took effect, for there arose a chorus of growls and howls and yells that would have made the bravest man's hair stand on end; there was scampering and shuffling of many feet up and down, and around the cabin, even in the thick darkness he could see many great creatures running and sniffling angrily about to find who had so wickedly threatened that he was designed on his own roof by at least a dozen furious, hungry bears.

"They didn't scare worth a cent," he said. "It was not long before they discovered where the shot had come, and, knowing very well that there is strength in numbers, they determined to have that man for supper, even if they had to put off their supper till breakfast time. So while some sat down here and there, the others walked about grunting and growling over their injuries. Bears can climb quite as well as men, and old Frank stood with fear and trembling in the middle of the roof, ready to receive with the butt of his gun the first shot that should rise above the edge. If two had happened to mount the roof on opposite sides, there would have been a small chance of life for the poor fellow. But the bears thought that solid ground was the safer place for them, so there they stood; and up above set old Frank shivering, how long he never knew. It seemed centuries. It was a sharp, frosty autumn night, and as he had on very little clothing Frank was soon chilled almost to his bones. But the bears' coats were warm enough. They were more hungry than they were cold, so there they sat and growled and waited for their prey to come down. A bitterly cold wind began to blow. Every joint in the poor man's body stiffened, but it seemed pleasant to freeze to death than to be eaten up by those ugly beasts, so he bore his discomfort as best he could. The hours of that night seemed centuries, and the chill grew terrible; but at last a dull gray streak appeared in the east. No man was ever more glad to see the first sign of dawn than was that chilly watcher. Bears are very early in the morning, and a little by little grew into broad day. Frank's visitors trotted away disappointed and sulky up to their dens on the mountains. Their victim, more dead than alive, was able at last to climb down and kindle a fire to warm himself. He still lives to tell his story in the same log-cabin; but it has a good stout door now, and he will never go bear-hunting with a shot gun.

No Time to Study Nature. Estelle (Dek.) Bell: "Ah," said the summer tourist, leaning over the fence and regarding the farmer, "may I be bold to inquire what that great quantity of green vegetation growing there is?" "Certainly mister; that's corn."

"Ah, thanks. And those large animals beyond beyond the fence, they are?" "Cows, my friend, over one of 'em cows. Say, you don't seem to be very well posted on these 'ere things."

"Perhaps not. The fact is, my business has kept me so close to the ground that this is the first chance I've had to get out into the country."

"Running a bank or something like that?" "No, sir. I am an editor of an agricultural paper. I have held that position for thirty years."

Hadn't Been Introduced to the Caterpillar. Chicago Tribune: A good natured newspaper chap was at a rustic picnic and rashly spoke to a young lady without the formality of an introduction. He happened to see a great fat caterpillar crawling on her lace collar, and jumping toward her said: "Madam, permit me to—"

But the young lady waved him off with an imperious and insulting gesture and said: "How dare you speak to me without an introduction. You are certainly no gentleman, sir!" Here the caterpillar overbalanced itself and fell down into her neck.

"What? Oh! Help!" she screamed in the fair one. The newspaper man was the only "somebody" around, and he said: "I couldn't think of it, madam; I haven't been introduced to the caterpillar."
