THE PRESIDENTS OF THE UNION

Nearly All of Them Have Enjoyed Their Country Homes. Louisville Post: President Cleveland has attracted a good deal of attention and comment in the last few years by his development of bucolic tastes, but in this he is only following in the footsteps of nearly every occupant of the presidental chair. Almost every president that this country has had has passed a part of his career in the delights of a country home. Washington, as everybody knows, owned a large estate at Mouat Vernon, where he refired after his two terms in the presdency. His death, it will be remember was caused from exposure incident to his duties on the piantation, which be delighted to manage in person, John Adams, his successor, retired after his term in the presidency had expired to a country seat, "Quincy," near Boston, and engaged in agricultural pursuits. Jeffer son, after his retirement from public life, established himself at his home, Monticello, Va, where he entertained his friends, managed his estate, and died regretted by a large number of servants and domestics, which he had with him to the last, Madison, after his term of office had expired, retired to Montpelier, Va., where he became rector of the university of Virginia and engaged in agricultural pursuits. Monroe, after the close of his public life, took up his residence at Oak Hill, Va., where he entertained his friends royally, so much so, in fact, that he soon found the bottom of his purse, and was finally obliged to give up his princely estate and take up his residence with re latives in New York, where he was still making his home at the time of his death. John Quincy Adams, after his term of office had expired, retired to the old family estate 'Quiney,' in Massachus-etts, but responded to his country's call again, and died at his post of duty in Washington, where he had been sent as a member of congress. Jackson, as every-body knows, retired to the "Hermitage," Nashville, where he died. Van Buren, after his term in office expired, retired to Kinderhook, N. Y., and there ended his days. Harrison, who died during his term in the presidency, was buried at his home in North Bend, Ohio, and there his remains still lie. Tyler was accustomed to country life, and delighted in it, as it brought him recollections of early life when his father was one of the largest land owners in Virginia. Polk, whose early days were spent in the country as the son of a farmer, looked forward to a comfortable life of retirement, just be side Nashville, after his term in the pres idency, but had been only three months away from here when death called him. laylor, who had worked on a plantation during his early life, had looked forward with pleasure to a quiet life on his estate at Baion Rouge, La., after retiring from his war service. He had scarcely begun this, however, when he was called to the presidency, and before his term had fairly begun his life ended. Fillmore was the son of a farmer, and spent his early life among rural delights. Pierce ever remembered with affection the place where his boyhood days were spent, and where he taught a country school when he arrived at the early years of man-Buchanan, after his presidential labors were over retired to a country place, 'Wheatland," in Pennsylvania, where he died. Lincoln, as everybody knows, was reared amid the most primitive country life and retained a great affection for the homely things of life to the day of his sad death. The same may be said of his successor, Johnson, who was in this respeet not unlike his more illustrious predecessor. Grant, who was a farmer in his earlier days, ended his days in the country, heartily wishing, no doubt, that he had followed the example of his predecessors, and retired to the country rather than have entered the whirlpool of New York business life. Hayes, as everybody knows is in retirement mon a farm in Ohio, devoting his attention to the duties of rural life, and entertaining the many friends who seek him out in his comparative seclusion. President Garfield went from his country home, at Mentor, Ohio, to the white house, where he was stricken down by the assassin's bullet, and his sorrowing wife and family after a couple of years of city life, have determined to sell their city home and return to their country residence. President Arthur, after a year of city life, at the close of his term, now seeks the country as his only hope of regaining the health lost in his service in the white house. And Presi-dent Cleveland, following the example of this long line of presidential predecessors, is preparing a country home for himself, only varying the order by beginning his country life during his actual term of service. Bartholdi's Statue of "Liberty Enlightening the World" will be a reminder of personal liberty for ages to come. On just as sure a founda-tion has Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" been placed, and it will stand through the cycles of time as a monu-ment to the physical emancipation of thousands, who by its use have been relieved from consumption, consumptive night-sweats,* bronchitis, coughs, spitting of blood, weak lungs, and other throat and lung affections. CURSED GOD AND DIED. The Awful Fate Which Befell an Ohio

Blasphemer. Lima Dispatch in Cincinnati Enquirer: The following remarkable story was re-lated to the Enquirer correspondent by a line between this and Mercer county: Last week, while at work in the fields, a farmer by the name of Sylvester Red-yan, owner of several hundred acres of fine farming land in Mercer county, be gan cursing in a most shocking manner about the drought injuring his crops, and wound up with an oath that he would cut God's heart out if he would come down. No sooner were the words uttered than a vivid streak of fire resembling lightning came down from the cloudless sky and struck Redyan. His companions who were in the harvest field with him were when the national for several minutes. When they recovered they were nearly frightened to death at the sight which presented itself. Redyan, the man who just a few seconds before had uttered the terrible curse, had been transformed into stone, and lay on the ground near where he had stood when he made the shocking offer to the Supreme Being. His clothes had been burned from him, and the lips were parted in the stone figure, just as Redyan had finished the oath. An awful heat arose from the piece of stone, and was so intense that no person could go near it.

While the story is so strange that it may not be believed by many, its truth is vouched for by my informant and several other equally as reliable men of that vicinity, with whom your correspondent has talked regarding the strange affair. Each of them has been to the place and seen the transfigured body, and do not hesitate to say that every word of the secount which i have given is correct. One man offered to hire a rig and drive the Enquirer man to the spot, and if things were not as he represented them to be he would pay the expense. Redyan was a man about forty years of age and had a family of a wife and five children, who are nearly wild with grief.

Redyan was addicted to swearing and could scarcely speak a word without ac-companying it with an oath. The coun-try near where the affair happened is not very thickly populated, which accounts for the remarkable transaction not being given to the public sooner.
